PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 97th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Friday, August 20, 1982

(Legislative day of Tuesday, August 17, 1982)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable JAMES ABDNOR, a Senator from the State of South Dakota.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, LL.D., D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Father in Heaven, the Senators and their staffs have come through a very difficult period physically and emotionally. Their bodies and minds need refreshing and renewal. Their families need to have time with them and they need time with their families. May the Labor Day recess provide the respite required to prepare them for the work remaining when they return to finish this session.

Some will be busy in their campaigns for reelection. Others will be responding to various requests and needs of their constituents. Give them wisdom in allocating time for their families, rest and play. Some will be traveling. Protect them as they go and return them safely to home and work. We ask this in the name of Him who promises to keep our "going out and coming in from this time forth and forever."—Psalm 121: 8. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D.C., August 20, 1982.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JAMES ABDNOR, a Senator from the State of South Dakota, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ABDNOR thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the Proceedings of the Senate be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is the intention of the leadership to turn as quickly as possible to the supplemental appropriations bill conference report. We are hopeful that a time agreement will be worked out so that all Members will know how long it will be before this matter is disposed of.

After the disposition of the conference report, we will then resume consideration of the debt ceiling bill.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION

On behalf of the leadership, I wish to thank all Members of the Senate for their cooperation in disposing of the items on the must list that was presented to the Senate by the majority leader some weeks ago. We have completed the constitutional amendment to balance the budget, the tax bill, the reconciliation bill, and the immigration bill.

Today we hope to dispose of the supplemental appropriations conference report. That will complete the work on the list set forth as a prerequisite to our being able to recess simultaneously with the House. The House will go out today. We hope to take up the recess resolution today.

It is my intention, Mr. President, to be on board a plane on its way to Alaska by at least 5:40 this evening. So I hope all Members would understand that those of us who are going far away have probably one plane to make today that would allow us to make it home. That is the case with me, and I know that other Members from the West would appreciate the cooperation of the rest of the Senate in allowing us to make the reservations we have because they are very difficult to get.

We have a lot of work to do when we come back in September. We have to discover how to dispose of 13 separate appropriations bills in a period of 3½ weeks and complete the work of the Senate on other matters. It will be a very busy period.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the two leaders be reserved for their personal use through the remainder of the day.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A TRIBUTE TO DEDICATED PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in 1972, a member of the U.S. Olympic Team remarked to a reporter that one of the most rewarding aspects of his involvement in the Olympic games was the opportunity to compete along side, instead of against, fellow Americans from colleges across the country. Athletes that were once the opposition had become teammates, and it was that transition that reminded him of the fact that despite circumstances that occasionally necessitated divisiveness, Americans are actually always on the same team, working for the same ideals and fighting for the same dreams.

I thought about that observation yesterday evening as I watched and listened to Speaker O'NEILL's Remarks to his colleagues before the vote on the tax bill conference report. Mr. President, the Speaker's words yesterday were words that could only be delivered by an astute politician and a dedicated public servant. It was a speech divorced from traditionally partisan ploys, and one that embraced the very essence of legislative craftmanship.

Speaker O'NEILL and I do not always play along side each other, but I believe that we never forget that we are on the same team. He gave a forceful and historic speech, and I want to once again thank him for his essential support in getting the conference report adopted.

I would also like to take this opportunity to commend the Republican leader in the House, Congressman MICHEL for is efforts and leadership throughout the tax debate. Congressman MICHEL has become an architect of numerous impressive victories in the House, and he is above all, a trusted partner in bicameral relations.

Here in the Senate, it is obvious to me, as it should be to everyone, that the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator DOLE, proved to be invaluable to this new chapter in economic policy. His tireless devotion, throughout seemingly endless hours of committee and conference work, provided both Chambers with one of the most important pieces of legislation we have considered all year.

Congress approval of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act completes an important stage of the budget cycle. I am confident that our experiences from this cycle will benefit our deliberations during the following one. As always, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, will be at the fulcrum of Senate action. Senator DOMENICI, has constructed a most impressive track record with regard to the overall budget process, and I am sure that I speak for my colleagues when I say we are fortunate to have his expertise.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the conference committee agreement on the supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6863, permits funding of additional unemployment compensation supplemental benefits for those workers who have exhausted their rights to any extended unemployment compensation under the Federal-State Extended Compensation Act of 1977.

I introduced legislation, S. 2542, to provide for an extended unemployment benefits program, and I testified before the Senate Finance Committee in support of extending these benefits.

The Senate agreed to an amendment to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act to urge the Senate conferees on the tax bill to include in their conference report, language creating a supplemental unemployment benefits program for those who have exhausted all other such benefits for which they are eligible and to insure that those States which have triggered off the extended benefits program will be reinstated.

Unemployment is at an alltime high since World War II. In July, 9.8 percent of the work force was unemployed; this translates to approximately 10.8 million people looking for work.

I have heard from many West Virginians who are now unemployed and have exhausted their benefits under the existing extended compensation program. These people have worked continuously through their adult working years and are struggling to raise families. Unemployment is not a respecter of age or background—it has affected the young married man just getting started, the middle-aged worker with growing children, as well as the man who has a few short years for retirement. These people have worked hard and in the American tradition have contributed to America's productivity. These unemployed workers are now finding themselves, because they are unable to find employment, in a position of having to sell or lose everything they have worked to achieve over the years. They are not unemployed because they are afraid of hard work or because they do not want to work—they are unemployed because of the recession and because they cannot find other jobs.

They are not asking for a handout, they are looking for work. In the depressed labor market, we are finding more and more instances of people looking for work and being turned away.

This is what is happening in West Virginia—I am sure that every Senator here whose State is experiencing high rates of unemployment will have a similar story to tell. Through no fault of their own, many American workers are without a job and have no immediate chance of finding another.

The funding provided in the supplemental appropriations bill will help these individuals during this time of recession. This is not a new approach. It has been done before in periods of recession—in 1971 and in 1974. Unemployment rates are even higher now than then.

Mr. President, clearly we must provide these benefits now. To do less would not be in the best interest of the country or its workers.

THE SETTLEMENT IN LEBANON

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, it is with a sense of relief that we all welcome the agreement in Lebanon leading to the withdrawal of the PLO from Beirut. This has been a most welcome development.

It is also a time to pay special tribute to Philip Habib, whose patient and skillful negotiations made this all possible. Called out of retirement from the Foreign Service by President Reagan last year to defuse an earlier crisis in Lebanon, Phil Habib has rendered yeoman service on behalf of his country.

The negotiations were among the most difficult and complex ever undertaken by a diplomat. But Phil Habib persevered. What is particularly impressive about Ambassador Habib's efforts is the fact that he retired from the Foreign Service after suffering a serious heart attack. Yet, even though there were physical risks facing him, he still refused to give up.

This is just the first step in returning Lebanon to the Lebanese. But it is an important first step. Both Phil Habib, and President Reagan who gave his special negotiator his full backing, deserve our gratitude and appreciation for accomplishing this impressive diplomatic breakthrough.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial in today's New York Times commending the efforts of Phil Habib be printed in the RECORD.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 20, 1982]

THE P.L.O., UNDER THE RUG

Last May the Foreign Service presented Philip Habib with its Director General's Cup, an engraved bowl celebrating his rough-hewn tenacity and accomplishment as a diplomat. Today the world owes him at least as much. Two momentous accomplishments are at hand.

After almost 11 weeks, the bloody battering of Lebanon can now stop. Starting Saturday, the P.L.O. fighters who have held west Beirut hostage will finally evacuate without goading the Israeli attackers into ferocious house-to-house fighting that would have vastly increased the carnage.

After seven years Lebanon can have its capital back, just as its presidential selection process begins. Parts of Beirut are rubble. Armed Syrian, Israeli and even P.L.O. forces remain in other parts of the country. A peacekeeping force of Americans, Italians and French will be around for perhaps a few months. But the capital city will be wholly in Lebanese hands.

Full credit belongs to Mr. Habib and to the President who backed him. The P.L.O. seems to be withdrawing without having won any more formal acceptance from the United States. Further, the outcome shows that Ariel Sharon, the blunt Israeli Defense Minister, was wrong and President Reagan right to see that lifting the siege of west Beirut required a reliable cease-fire and not more divebombers. Some credit belongs to the Israeli Cabinet for belatedly recognizing the point and holding General Sharon back.

There is no question that the Israeli offensive has gutted the P.L.O. for years as a military force. There is also no question that the P.L.O. received a devastating political blow from its Arab brothers: not one Arab country offered to help. It took weeks even to arrange haven for the departing P.L.O. fighters. What remains unclear is how heavy a political price Israel will pay for its military gains.

That question must now be asked in the context of the bitter problems that remain. How, for instance, can the withdrawal of all foreign forces—Syrian, Israeli and P.L.O. outside Beirut—be negotiated? What can be done to reconstitute the Lebanese Government? Above all, how can Israel be brought to accept the reality of the Palestinians? Force of arms can, for the moment, sweep the P.L.O. under rugs in Jordan, Tunisia or Syria. But Palestinian aspirations, now more intense than ever, will not be so readily quenched.

There will be time enough to wrestle with such longer, larger torments. For the moment, it is enough to celebrate the peace already seeping back through the broken streets of west Beirut.

EDUCATION FOR THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased that the conference committee agreement on the supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1982 retains the language adopted by the Senate, which I supported, to prohibit the Department of Education from implementing changes in the existing regulations for the education for all Handicapped Children Act of 1975, until 45 days after the 97th Congress reconvenes sine die or until the 98th Congress convenes in January.

Earlier this year I joined with a number of my Senate colleagues in sending a letter to the President to urge full funding for Public Law 94-142 and to urge that no changes be made in the statute which would dilute the effectiveness of the existing law. Despite this action, the Department of Education has issued proposed regulations which would weaken existing law.

Prior to the enactment of Public Law 94-142, educational opportunities for the handicapped were not provided in many States. Many times parents of special children met with a brick wall in trying to find an appropriate education for their child. The choices were limited—institutionalization or if you were fortunate enough to find a private school or institution, the cost was prohibitive.

With the enactment of Public Law 94-142 in 1975, a Federal mandate was provided for a free appropriate public education for the handicapped. Since enactment of this law, handicapped children have been brought into the mainstream of American life and have been provided with an opportunity to become self-sufficient. Only those who have borne the responsiblitity of caring for a handicapped child can truly know the frustration and joys of these children. The courage of the handicapped should be an example to us all. They struggle against great odds—their battles are hard fought and hard won. Great strides have been made in recent years, and I do not feel that any changes should be made in existing law until the Congress has had an opportunity to review proposals to insure that these educational opportunities remain available. Adoption of this language by the Senate and the conferees sends a message to the President and the Department of Education that Congress remains firm on this issue.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1982—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 6863 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6863) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their repective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of August 13, 1982, page H5912).

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Is the conference report now open to amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is not open for amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if I may state to my good friend from Arizona, we are waiting for the managers of the bill. When they arrive, the Senate will proceed, I believe, to approve the conference report. After that time, matters such as the Senator from Arizona has could be raised in connection with an amendment in disagreement.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Can the Senator give me some idea of what time these people might get to work?

Mr. STEVENS. Well, they live on Yankee time. We cannot keep up with them. They are from the East and from the West. There is a little difference in the time. I could not answer the question directly. I am sorry.

Mr. GOLDWATER. We were told that the Senate would open at 9 a.m. and that there was great anxiety on the part of both the majority and the minority leaders to get out of here. Consequently, I got up quite early, prepared myself for the day, and got down here. Now I find there are bankers' hours being kept. I could have slept another hour.

I would like to know when the Senate is going to get to work on time. I am going to have to start running on Greenwich time because we do not do things in the morning that we say we are going to do the night before. Maybe Members are so busy that they cannot get here on time. I have my doubts. I would like to know sometime that I could get here at the opening hour and things would be ready to go. It used to be that way, but it has not been for a long time.

I do not say I am tired of it. I am just getting upset. If 9 o'clock means 10 o'clock, I will set my clock back. We will get on Alaska time. That is even better.

Mr. STEVENS. I might point out to my good friend that in Alaska it is 20 minutes after 4 in the morning.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Well, we might as well go in at that time, knowing that we are open at 10. Then we will all have a good idea. I have been waiting around here with a little old amendment for a long time.

Mr. STEVENS. That is one of the reasons I would like to get on that plane this afternoon because when I get up tomorrow morning to go to a State park dedication at 7 o'clock, it is going to be a little difficult. I would like to see us finish our work.

I agree with the Senator, I might say, but why do we not finish this dialog over a cup of coffee and save the taxpayers some money.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I do not drink coffee and it is too early in the day for what I do drink. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I might say to the distinguished Senator he has talked me out of drinking coffee.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending matter be temporarily set aside for the purpose of having routine morning business during which Senators may speak, not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m. or at the time when the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the senior Senator from Oregon, wishes to commence consideration of this conference report.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO FORMER U.S. SENATOR THRUSTON B. MORTON OF KENTUCKY

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on Saturday, August 14, 1982, Thruston B. Morton, a former Assistant Secretary of State, Congressman, and colleague in the U.S. Senate, passed away at the age of 74 at his home in Louisville, Ky. To his devoted wife, children, family, and friends I extend my deepest sympathy.

Without question, the State of Kentucky and our Nation has experienced a great loss in the passing of this man.

His contributions have made their mark in both Houses of Congress, as well as in the administrative branch of Government. His 6 years of dedicated service in the U.S. House of Representatives was a springboard from which Thruston would begin an effective political career. Following his service in the House, he served as a valuable member of the Eisenhower administration as Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Affairs. Upon completing his duties at the State Department, he was elected to the U.S. Senate, where he served his State and country well in that post for 12 years.

Mr. President, Thruston Morton was a master of parliamentary procedure, which proved to be an important asset for him in his dealings on the Senate floor. He was known as an articulate and well-respected gentleman, whose vast knowledge earned him the admiration of his colleagues, not only within the Republican Party, but in other circles as well.

Thruston was dedicated to serving others. He had a deep love for his country and a strong belief in the good of its people. Though a man with deeply rooted convictions, Thruston Morton remained openminded, and was always fair to those whose beliefs were contrary to his own.

After his political career, Thruston returned to his Kentucky homeland where he became a successful banker. There, in the Bluegrass State, he was able to devote some of his energy to one of his favorite pastimes—horses. His special fondness of horses led him to become involved in the American Horse Council, where he served as president.

Mr. President, when Thruston Morton retired from the Senate in 1969, he was truly missed on Capitol Hill. Now, that sense of loss has been multiplied beyond measure as we mourn his untimely death. He was a dedicated colleague, a skillful diplomat, and a trusted friend. Thruston was a courageous American; a man of great ability and integrity; and an asset to the State of Kentucky and to our Nation. We are saddened by his passing. Yet, we are comforted in knowing that his invaluable contributions will live on.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article about Thruston Morton from the August 15, 1982, edition of the Washington Post appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THRUSTON B. MORTON DIES AT 74

Thruston B. Morton, 74, a Kentuckian who was a former assistant secretary of State, congressman, and chairman of the Republican National Committee and served in the Senate from 1957 to 1969, died yesterday in his home in Louisville. He had cancer.

He was a member of the House of Representatives from 1947 to 1953, then spent three years as assistant secretary of State for congressional affairs during the Eisenhower administration. He won the first of two Senate elections in 1956. He retired from the Senate in 1969. He was GOP national chairman from 1959 to 1961.

During his years in Washington, Sen. Morton became a leader of his party's moderate wing. He became better known for his concern about international affairs than as an advocate of the interests of his state. He represented a rural, border state, yet called on the Republican Party not to ally itself with the forces of racial segregation in the South. He attacked leaders in both parties during the urban riots of the late 1960s, saving much of the debate on the riots was "irresponsible."

Urbane, wealthy, and Yale-educated, Sen. Morton could play the patrician or could become a blunt-talking, blunt-acting politician. He gained widespread respect for his parliamentary skills, his party leadership, and his political courage. In 1967, when most persons of his party and state probably supported the war in Southeast Asia, Sen. Morton came out against the Johnson administration's policies. A year later, Sen. Morton called for a halt to our policy of "high-handed interventionism."

Yet his power within his party in the Senate was formidable. He led a rebellion against the then-Senate Republican leader, Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois, urging approval of a U.S.-Soviet consular treaty that Dirksen sought to defeat. Dirksen eventually reversed his stand. He joined Sen. Morton, and a majority of the Senate Republicans in voting for the treaty. The treaty received the two-thirds majority it needed and passed.

By the end of his second term, Sen. Morton was being touted as either the next Republican Senate leader or its 1968 vice-presidential nominee. And although he had faced stiff Senate races in 1956 and again in 1962, he was expected by leaders of both parties to be unbeatable in his 1968 reelection race. It thus came as shock when Sen. Morton announced in February 1968 that he would not seek reelection and was leaving public life.

In a press conference in Louisville on Feb. 23, 1968 officially announcing his retirement, he said he was quitting "for very compelling personal reasons. To use an old Kentucky expression, I suppose I am just plain track sore."

The next day, an editorial in The Post deplored his decision. It said that "At 60, he is alert, vigorous and apparently in tune with the problems of the day. His decision to retire will entail severe losses to the Senate, the country, and the Republican Party. Congress has great need of well-informed men of moderate views who are still capable of vigorous activity."

During his last year in office, Sen. Morton served as cochairman of Nelson A. Rockefeller's unsuccessful bid for the 1968 Republican Presidential nomination. He campaigned for Richard M. Nixon, the party's nominee, during the 1968 general election. Since leaving office, Sen. Morton had been a Louisville Banker and president of the American Horse Council, an association formed to promote the horse industry.

Sen. Morton was a native of Louisville and a 1929 graduate of Yale University. He served with the Navy aboard mine-sweepers and destroyers in the Pacific during World War II. He then became president of the family grain and milling firm. It was sold to Pillsbury in 1951.

He was elected to Congress in 1946, and twice won reelection. He declined to run for reelection in 1952. During his years in the House, he voted for Greek-Turkish aid and the anti-poll tax bill, and opposed cuts in foreign aid. He also opposed the shrill anti-communist cliches that pervaded much of the political dialogue of the time.

He once said, "I think we have a rather myopic view of communism that doesn't help the cause of world peace. I hate communism. I deplore its atheistic qualities and all about it, But I think that if the Russians and ourselves could sit down together like grown men and say we're going to stop wars, why we could do it."

In 1956, he challenged Earle C. Clements for the Senate. Clements was a former governor, the incumbent senator, and was acting Democratic Senate leader at the time of the race. Sen. Morton beat him by a thin margin of 506,903 votes to 499,922.

Sen. Morton was the brother of Rogers C.B. Morton, a former Maryland congressman, secretary of the Interior under President Richard Nixon, and Republican National Chairman, who died in 1979.

Sen. Morton's survivors include his wife, Belle Clay Lyons Morton, two sons, Clay Lyons Morton and T. Ballard Morton Jr., and a sister, Jane Morton Norton, all of Louisville, and five grandchildren.

TRIBUTE TO MARGARET CLAIRE KELLY HAMRICK OF CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Mrs. Margaret Claire Kelly Hamrick, a fine lady from my home State of South Carolina, who recently passed away. Mrs. Hamrick participated in a wide range of civic and church activities, which helped to make her State a better place in which to live. I want to formally recognize those accomplishments at this time.

Margaret Hamrick, wife of Dr. John Hamrick, president and founder of Baptist College in Charleston, S.C., was often referred to as "the first lady" of Baptist College. She exemplified charm and grace in her role as first lady of the College. She was never far from the center of activities of her husband's ministry, and she played an important role in the founding of Baptist College.

For many years, Mrs. Hamrick taught English and Bible in the First Baptist Church Day School, an institution she was instrumental in founding. Because of her devotion to others and her dedicated work, Margaret Hamrick was the 1974 recipient of the Charleston Federation of Womens Club's Hall of Fame recognition.

Mrs. Hamrick has been recognized by many to have been "gifted with vision, leadership, and, most importantly, the ability to teach." The education brought to others by this extraordinary lady was more than common book knowledge. She taught people the meaning of courage, faith, loyalty, and love. Her service to others was exceeded only by her service to God.

Those who were fortunate enough to know Margaret Hamrick say,

She was a flame that has always burned high, and her indomitable courage has been an inspiration to every person who knew her.

Mr. President, I concur wholeheartedly in that assessment, and I ask unanimous consent that a brief biographical sketch of Mrs. Hamrick be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the sketch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF MARGARET CLAIRE KELLY HAMRICK

Gifted in vision, leadership, organizational ability, writing and teaching, Margaret Hamrick was never far from the center of activities that have marked her husband's ministry. She was instrumental in the founding of Charleston's First Baptist Church Day School, and she was at her husband's side at the founding of Baptist College at Charleston.

For many years she taught English and Bible in the day school and since then organized and directed countless Bible studies, both in the church, the school and in her own home.

She wrote many devotional materials, religious pageants, and skits for special events. At the time of her husband's inauguration as president of Baptist College, Margaret's fine planning was at the helm of the intricate and detailed matters surrounding massive guest lists and decisions as to appropriate handling of social aspects of the event.

She was a member of Delta Kappa Gamma, honorary organization for teachers, and in 1974, was recipient of the Charleston Federation of Women's Club's Hall of Fame recognition.

Members of First Baptist Church, Charleston, have sought in many ways to show their affection for Margaret Hamrick. Last year they gave symbolic recognition through the publishing of a "Margaret Hamrick Cookbook" released at the time of the dedication of the church's John A. Hamrick Activities Building.

But the imprint of her personality goes far beyond the written word or the pages in a book. The constancy of her prayers, the hours she spent in teaching, leading, writing and the example she set in a Gibraltar kind of faith all converge as a monument to the testimony of her life.

Her interest in others was a flame that always burned high, and her indomitable courage was an inspiration to every person who knew her. Even after many months of illness she was still saying, "Everyone suffers, in some way . . . I am still praising God!"

Her attitude toward life was consistent—a combination of enthusiasm, patience in the face of all difficulties, and unshakable faith. Her example won for her the love and loyal following of countless individuals from all walks of life. During her life her mail was flooded with letters from former students, and from individuals whose lives had been touched by her spirit.

In Charleston, as Baptist College's First Lady, she had for seventeen years presided at the institution's regular social and official events with charm and graciousness. With her husband, she lent inspiration to the yearly Christmas reception. This festivity bore her special touch each year as she created its theme of color and direction, making each one distinctively hers; and always she managed to greet and touch the hand of every guest and worker. The guest list of this event is counted in the thousands. The strength of Margaret Hamrick's love, the depth of her faith in God, and the unfailing evidence of the joy with which she served Him, are a testimony that has made impressions yet to be fully grasped.

TRIBUTE TO NORMAN A. CARLSON, DIRECTOR OF THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF PRISONS

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, over the years I have met and observed thousands of public service employees at the local, State, and Federal levels. By far the large majority of them have been good, hard-working, and dedicated people. Within that large group there are many that stand out because of their extraordinary talents to manage this great enterprise we call Government.

For more than 10 years, I have been associated with the State-Justice-Commerce Appropriations Subcommittee. Hundreds of witnesses have testified before us, but none has impressed me more than the outstanding Director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, Norman A. Carlson. His presentations to the subcommittee are a model of succinctness and clarity that should be a model for all witnesses before the Appropriations Committee. During his brief annual visits to the committee, we can sense the warmth of this giant of a man and know that firm compassion is the watchword of the Federal prison system.

Those that know the inner working of the Bureau of Prisons realize that it is much like a large family. That good atmosphere is maintained by the Director who travels extensively to all the facilities, rises early in the morning to eat breakfast with the inmates, and seems to know all of the employees as he walks through the facilities to assure his high standards of care.

Last week Mr. Carlson completed 25 years of Federal service, a further milestone in a brilliant career that has been marked by many justly deserved awards. This is fitting moment to briefly recite the highlights of Mr. Carlson's career with the Bureau.

Norman A. Carlson has been Director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons since 1970. Like his three predecessors—Sanford Bates (1930–37) James V. Bennett (1937–64) and Myrl E. Alexander (1964–1970)—he is a career public administrator with the Department of Justice.

Mr. Carlson began his career as a Correctional Officer at the Iowa State Penitentiary, Fort Madison, Iowa, in 1956 while attending graduate school at the University of Iowa. He entered the Federal Prison System the following year as a parole officer at the U.S. Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kansas. His next assignment was as a Supervisor at the Federal Correctional Institution, Ashland, Kentucky, from 1958 to 1960.

He came to Washington in 1960 when he was promoted to Assistant Supervisor of the Division of Institutional Programs. Beginning the following year, he served a four-year assignment as project director for the developing Community Treatment Center (halfway house) program.

Mr. Carlson was one of the Federal career executives chosen in 1965 to spend a year at the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, Princeton University, as a National Institute of Public Affairs fellow. He was named a delegate to the United Nations Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in 1971 and was co-chairman of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders held in Geneva during 1975, and co-chairman of a similar delegation at Caracas. Venezuela, in 1980.

In 1966, Mr. Carlson became Executive Assistant to Bureau Director Myrl E. Alexander until his retirement in January, 1970. Mr. Carlson was named Director March 25, 1970.

He received the Arthur S. Flemming Award in February, 1972, honoring him as one of 10 outstanding men and women in the Federal government. In May, 1978, Mr. Carlson received the Roger W. Jones Award for Executive Leadership from the American University, Washington, D.C.

In July, 1981, he received the Attorney General's Award for Exceptional Service, the highest award granted by the Department of Justice. In August, 1981, he was given the E. R. Cass Award, an award made annually by the American Correctional Association. On Nov. 4, 1981, he received the Presidential Rank Award of Meritorious Executive in the Senior Executive Service. The Department of Justice honored him at its Fifth Annual Special Recognition Program Feb. 25, 1982, for establishing in the Bureau of Prisons one of the leading Equal Employment Opportunity Programs in the Department.

In February, 1982, Mr. Carlson was named an Advisor to the College of Public and International Affairs of the American University, Washington, D.C. He has been a member of the Advisory Committee of the Center for Criminal Justice of Harvard Law School and of the visiting committee of the School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York at Albany. Mr. Carlson has also served on the Advisory Board of the Institute of Criminal Justice and Criminology at the University of Maryland.

Mr. Carlson was President of the American Correctional Association in 1978–1980 and is now a member of its Executive Committee. In 1971, he was elected to membership in the National Academy of Public Administration.

Mr. Carlson was born in Sioux City, Iowa on August 10, 1933. He received a B. A. degree from Gustavus Adolphus College, St. Peter, Minnesota in Sociology in 1955 and a Master's degree in Criminology from the University of Iowa in 1957.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I want to join my distinguished colleagues in noting this milestone in the career of Norman A. Carlson, the Director of the Bureau of Prisons.

Outstanding, indeed, are Mr. Carlson's contributions to the Nation. A member of the career service since 1956, he became Director in 1970 of the Bureau of Prisons. His service is distinguished by a genuine dedication to high standards of care, advances in corrections, and a true understanding of the needs of the employees of the prison system, as well as the inmates.

Mr. Carlson appears each year before the Subcommittee on State, Justice, Commerce, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies which I chair. He is a forthright witness who speaks frankly of the needs of the prisons.

I wish him well and look forward to continuing to work with him in the future.

THE CAPITOL HILL HASSLE

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial comment appearing in the August 23 edition of Newsweek written by James A. Miller, special assistant to the majority leader.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CAPITOL HILL HASSLE

(By James A. Miller)

After a year of working in the United States Senate, I am intrigued less by who votes for what than by why all these "whos" are even here. Recently, serving in Congress has turned into such an aggravating, exhausting and generally exasperating hassle, it's a wonder anybody wants to do it. Perhaps never before in political history have so many sacrificed so much for so little that was supposed to be so much.

A wise man once said, "Person who climb ladder of success too far, may hit head on ceiling." Running for Congress is chancy and perilous enough, but serving there has become nothing less than an endurance test. The Hays Scandal, the Mills Scandal, Koreagate and Abscam weren't enough; now there's talk of Pagescam or Sexscam or Dopescam, or whatever one wants to call the current flurry. It really doesn't matter if a legislator is personally involved or not; citizens assimilate and stereotype at the drop of an innuendo.

If people are starting to feel squeamish about running for Congress, who can blame them? It's not that they can't stand the heat and are getting out of the kitchen; it's that nobody in his or her right mind rushes into a kitchen that's already a blazing inferno.

FUND RAISING

Congress, lacking miracle cures, keeps falling short of national dreams, and politicans keep falling short of public expectations. The combination of financial sacrifices, wrenching family traumas, media aggressiveness and endless fund raising is driving smart members home and smart potential candidates away.

The sad fact is, the inducements to run for Congress aren't all that glorious to begin with. In fact, they may never before have been so paltry. An individual graduating with honors from a top-ranked law school may earn more after a few years than does a representative or a senator. In addition, lawyers in the private sector do not have to maintain two houses or comply with restrictions on income or publish their tax returns for all the world to see.

Whatever a representative or senator might choose to do instead of serving in Congress would, almost unquestionably, be a great deal more lucrative and rewarding than public office. After all, if these people could convince an entire district, or an entire state, that they were capable of leading and legislating the affairs of those who elected them, and if they had the financial resources to launch a successful drive to office, chances are that they are capable of getting a great many other jobs that would be regarded as darn good.

Congressmen are more than legislators, they are executives who must manage large staffs; they are businessmen as well. It is ironic that they could be more finanically successful selling used cars back home.

Republican Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, goes from lunch with bank executives who make hundreds of thousands of dollars a year to the Senate floor where he must fight to lift the limitation on honorariums that senators can accept. Senator Garn has seven children, a mortgage in Washington and a mortgage in Utah.

But there is a much more profound frustration than money that he makes serving in Congress more and more of an ordeal. There is a perceived decline in the number of qualified and committed people who serve there—because the positions of senators or representative are not as attractive as they should be, or as they once were. Perhaps this is why Senator Garn, in a speech on the Senate floor in May, during the debate on the budget, cried out, "I am angry. I am angry at this body. I am angry at Congress—and I do not care which party, Republicans or Democrats—because there are weak-kneed, gutless politicians on both sides who will not face up to the issues . . ."

In Congress today one is expected to have the intellectual credentials of a Rhodes scholar, the oratorical skills of a Ted Koppel, the godlike trustworthiness of a Walter Cronkite and the sense of humor of a Johnny Carson. Americans may expect too much of the people they choose to represent them. After all, these aren't extraterrestrials. They're people who grew up next door, people who are just as capable of failure and indecisive as anybody else.

When those folks next door get to Washington, they will have to adapt to a life without privacy. They must endure constant intrusions from aggressive reporters and countless interest groups, nonstop fund raising to sustain their political and financial survival, exhausting plane travel, the disruption of normal family life and a growing fear that all this may just be too much trouble for too little satisfaction. From a great distance, serving in Congress sounds like fun—lots of power, money and great tables at French restaurants. When you see it up close, you realize it's more like tuna fish sandwiches from carryouts. The glamour disappears and people who should know better start regarding you as some lower form of life.

The cost-benefit ratio for many in Congress has fallen to a new low. The usual reasons for retirement—age, political vulnerability, redistricting and new political aims—are being replaced as quickly as one can say, "It's not worth it." In fact, they are being replaced by "It's not worth it."

RISK

It's hard to forget the smile of the wife of former Rep. John Cavanaugh, a Nebraska Democrat, as he announced his retirement from Congress at 35. Or the rhetorical question Texas Democratic Rep. Joe Wyatt Jr. put to a reporter a couple of years ago: "Why stay and take the grief?"

Certainly we should hold the people we elect to high standards—but not impossible ones. If they check all their frailties and vulnerabilities at the door of Congress, might they not be checking their humanity as well? "Nobody's perfect" is a pretty feeble excuse for wrongdoing, malfeasance and willful deceit, but the fact remains that nobody is perfect. If we wait around for perfect beings to elect to Congress, we risk frightening the imperfect but damned good people away. As for those who are currently serving, as long as they are masochistic enough to stay, we might as well take advantage of their talents.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, this is a very appropriate, precise comment that I think more people should read.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. HATFIELD. What is the pending business, Mr. President?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is now closed.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1982—CONFERENCE REPORT

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will resume consideration of the conference report on the supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, has the conference report been laid down?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report has been reported.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Chair.

The Senate continued with consideration of the conference report.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, we now have before us the conference report on H.R. 6863, the fiscal year 1982 supplemental. The conference agreement recommends a total of $14,117,265,924 in budget authority. Of that amount, $5,000,000,000 is for borrowing authority for the Commodity Credit Corporation, requested by the administration and provided by both Houses. Of the remaining amount, $6,145,002,640 is for increased pay costs due to last October's cost-of-living increase. The remainder, or $3,032,263,284, is for program supplementals in agencies throughout the Government.

Mr. President, the total amount of spending recommended in this conference agreement is $1,878,918,076 below the President's request. Officials in the Office of Management and Budget have attempted to characterize this bill as a "budget-buster" through the representation that it provides spending for certain domestic programs $918,000,000 in excess of the President's request. That sum provides funding for such programs as community service employment for older Americans, $211,000,000; compensatory education for the disadvantaged, $148,000,000; student financial assistance, $217,000,000; Coast Guard operating expenses, $30,000,000; payment to the Postal Service fund, $39,000,000; Federal highways, $112,500,000; and education for the handicapped, $26,000,000, among others.

I make no apology for the provision of these funds. These are important and useful programs, and it is manifestly apparent that a majority of both Houses strongly supports them. I do disagree vehemently with OMB's analysis of this bill, for several reasons.

First, OMB's bean counters have added up only the congressional increases in funding for certain domestic programs, and have not subtracted the congressional reductions.

Excluding the defense foreign operations and military construction chapters for consideration, this measure is $565 million over the request, not $918 million. I do not know what school of business finance they went to, but they obviously have not learned some elementary lessons about adding and subtracting; either that or it is a deliberate misrepresentation of the accuracy of this budget.

Second, OMB has chosen to look only at so-called nondefense spending, and ignore the substantial savings made in the defense area, savings which were not disputed in either committee, on either floor, or in conference.

Third, and most important, OMB's characterization of this bill as a budget buster because it exceeds the President's request for certain programs strikes at the heart of the constitutional role of Congress in determining spending priorities.

The Constitution is quite clear on this. No funds can be drawn from the Treasury except by act of Congress, and the Budget Act emphasizes that the President may not tamper heedlessly with appropriated funds. When it comes to budget matters, the President may propose, but the Congress disposes. So if Congress wishes to appropriate more funds for a certain program than the President has requested, and less for another, so be it. Of course, the President may always veto the legislation, but in this instance I feel very strongly that he would be most ill-advised to do so.

I repeat, Mr. President, that this bill recommends spending $1,878,918.076 below the President's request. This is not a budget buster, it is a deficit reduction measure. And, Mr. President, it is not only substantially below the President's request, it is even farther below the existing congressional budget resolution. As Chairman DOMENICI will confirm in his statement on this measure, total spending after enactment of this bill will be $8.1 billion in budget authority and $1.1 billion in outlays below the ceilings of the budget resolution.

So, Mr. President, I commend this conference report to my colleagues as a fine example of spending restraint. I trust the President will sign the bill. If for some reason he does not, I will urge my colleagues in the House to override his veto, and will certainly do so here in this body.

I think, Mr. President, we might as well draw the line here, today, as it relates to the imperial mentality of the Office of Management and Budget. This is a congressional prerogative, constitutionally established, and to be defended by every Member of this body on both sides of the aisle.

I yield to my good friend and colleague from the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the conferees on the supplemental appropriation bill for fiscal year 1983 have recommended a reduction in the President's supplemental budget requests by almost $1.9 billion including the rescission of $113 million more than the total rescissions requested by the President. It is true that the bill as it comes out of conference contains $186.6 million more than the Senate-passed bill. There was a tendency to go for the higher of the House or Senate figure in conference. Nonetheless a budget reduction of approximately $2.4 billion in defense spending has more than offset increases in domestic spending above the President's budget of $566 million.

I wish it had been possible to meet the President's domestic marks as well. This would have meant the bill produced savings of about $3 billion. Personally, I would strongly favor that. Nonetheless, I find it difficult to object to congressional action that has made a cut of 17 percent in the President's overall supplemental requests and at the same time provided a whopping $5.7 billion—over 60 percent of the total budget authority included in the bill—for the Defense Department.

Let me repeat that: 60 percent of the money in this bill is for the Defense Department. It is less than the President requested, but nevertheless, it is very largely a defense supplemental bill. I think the Congress has done a competent and responsible job of restraining Federal spending in acting on this supplemental bill.

I congratulate my good friend from Oregon on the fine job he has done, as he always does.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. I will take a back seat to no one in this Senate as to review of spending by the Defense Department and every other department, but I point out that the money that is in this supplemental, which is set aside for the Defense Department, is primarily for military pay. That is the fulfillment of a commitment made by the Congress in terms of military pay increments to keep a comparability of military pay to civilian pay.

I think it is very significant that that has had a great impact on our ability to recruit and to retain personnel in our Armed forces.

In fact, to make the record specific, of that total amount for military, $5.5 billion is for pay increase for the military.

I have supported military pay. I feel it is not only an equitable matter to pay comparable compensation for those serving in the armed services to that which they might earn in civilian capacities, but I also think that maintaining comparability is the best answer to those who want to restore the draft. If we can retain the comparability standards that we have set, we are getting the volunteers. and so it is not only a matter of equity and fairness, but it is the best counteraction for those who would advocate the restoration of the draft, which I know others as well heartily oppose.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield? Adding to what the distinguished chairman has said, the items that were deleted from this bill were deleted in the defense area. The Department of Defense items were not deleted because they were unneeded; they were deleted because of the impact of the 1983 budget outlay ceilings that our subcommittee must work under for the 1983 bill. It was my determination that if we had included those items in this supplemental, it would have limited our flexibility in dealing with the 1983 bill because of the budget ceiling in terms of budgetary outlays. I hope that the chairman of the committee and other members realize that some of the items that we have deleted may well come back into the 1983 bill, but they will come back within the budget ceiling since that is where they would have impacted. This bill, having come up so late in the year, will not actually become law until most likely just before the last month of the fiscal year. The outlays of necessity would have taken place during 1983 and would have impacted our 1983 outlay ceiling.

In order to maintain maximum flexibility in dealing with the 1983 appropriations request for the Department of Defense, we have deleted those items with the understanding that all of them will be reviewed in connection with the full bill for 1983. I hope the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Wisconsin understand that.

Mr. President, I must emphasize again the urgency of enacting this supplemental as quickly as possible. Time is running out on many programs requiring this additional funding, and there is separate justification for quick action to support those programs simply to avoid disruptions and cost increases. But the real urgency lies with the pay cost supplemental, particularly with the military pay requirements.

I am not exaggerating, Mr. President, when I state that time has already run out on military pay. There is no additional funding available for payrolls, and even the Pentagon's transfer authority is running out. The Secretary of Defense has warned that all appropriated funds for a military payroll have been exhausted. By law, the Department can neither obligate nor expend additional funds in the absence of supplemental appropriations.

These funds were exhausted on August 18, Mr. President—2 days ago. If the Department is to pay the troops, there is only $164 million in unused transfer authority and—as a desperate stretch out tactic—the so-called food and forage authority available to the military.

The transfer authority is not sufficient to get the Department through the next full payday. It would not even come close. Food and forage authority, a long standing permanent appropriation designed many years ago to cover urgent military needs for basic supplies, can be used to cover other costs so that funds appropriated for operation and maintenance needs could be diverted to pay.

Use of the food and forage authority in this manner is questionable at best. Congress has no business putting the military in a situation that even suggests using a measure with such dubious legality.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I concur with the observations made by the Senator from Alaska, who is the chairman of the Defense Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, and he has stated the case very accurately. I concur with his general observations.

Mr. PROXMIRE. If the Senator will yield, it is also my understanding that the Defense Department asked for these increases in the regular bill. They were turned down.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. PROXMIRE. They were turned down by the House and by the Senate. This is a supplemental bill, and therefore we were simply following a policy that the House and Senate previously established.

I might point out to my good friend from Oregon that not only is this pay increase important in persuading volunteers to enlist in the military, but I think all of us recognize, if we have learned any lesson in the past few years, it is that military strength depends primarily on the quality of the people, their motivation, their desire to be there, their pride in their unit, their leadership. Of course, there are other ingredients that are important, too, but pay is vitally important if you are going to get competent people to stay in the military; you get what you pay for. I think that this part of the military appropriation is absolutely right and I support my chairman on this. I think he is making the right argument.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. President, there are, I believe, two amendments in disagreement that have to be handled on this conference report?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are many more than that.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am extrapolating from the amendments en bloc two amendments, one having to do with the pay commission, one having to do with a copper amendment by the Senator from New Mexico. I believe that they have to be handled separately from the ones that we would possibly agree to en bloc; is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. I order to then get to those amendments, Mr. President, what is the appropriate motion to make at this time?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will have to dispose of the conference report.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move the adoption——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. And the House-added amendments.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SCHMITT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. LEVIN addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no such motion to move to adopt the conference report until the end. Then the question will be put. When the Senators have ceased to debate, then the question on the conference report will be put.

Mr. HATFIELD. I understand the Chair to say in order to get to the business before the Senate today we have to move the adoption of the conference report in order to take up the amendments. Is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. The Chair assumes that there are other Senators seeking the floor to discuss the conference report.

Mr. HATFIELD. Does the Senator wish to speak to the conference report?

Mr. SCHMITT. The Senator from Oregon is correct.

Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SCHMITT. I am happy to recommend to the Senate the adoption of the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education chapter, chapter IX, of this regular fiscal year 1982 supplemental conference report. The conference agreement on the bill takes account of longstanding concerns in health, education, and other programs, many of which were deferred in our consideration of the urgent supplemental.

As a result of the recent conference, chapter IX is $230 million above the request level but some $9 million below the recommendations of the House. Two hundred and ten million dollars, however, of that increase is a sincere disagreement with the administration on the mandate of current law relative to senior citizens programs. I do not think there is any question that we must provide that money as advance funding for those programs. I am still surprised that we hear noises from the administration that that is one of the items that they disagree with. There really is no choice.

Most importantly, our conference bill provides enabling language to fund and administer the supplemental benefits program automatically upon enactment of authorizing legislation. By acting now on the appropriations, language, we avoid delay in getting the benefits out to the long-term jobless in every State, including New Mexico. Last night's action on the tax increase measure, the conference report containing those tax increases, did, as one beneficial item, contain the authorizing language necessary to begin to make available an extension of unemployment benefits. This conference report will clear the deck so that can take place in an expeditious manner.

The final supplemental bill also includes additional funds for older workers programs; as I indicated earlier, for important disease prevention activities, particularly those that deal with the research into this extraordinary new disease as yet undefined that has cropped up in recent months in New York and now in other cities. It is my hope that the $500,000 additional research funds here will enable us to crack this mystery and avoid any significant national consequences.

In addition, Mr. President, the conference report includes funds for compensatory, handicapped, and vocational education. In addition, we provide some further financial assistance, significant financial assistance, for college students from low-income families.

The conferees, I am glad to say, agreed to my amendment to begin targeting more institutional aid, in the developing institutions programs, to schools with large enrollments of Hispanic and native American students. Heretofore, the assistance to these groups has been far too limited and random to really take care of their special programs.

I am pleased with the conference result on chapter 9, and I believe that the Members can give it strong support.

My only major disappointment in this measure is with one of the amendments in disagreement. The House declined to concur and recede to the Senate in a very important matter dealing with the copper stockpile. That, I think, is unfortunate, in that the workers in that industry as well as the industry itself are going to be the losers.

I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on HHS.

Mr. President, this is probably one of the most difficult of all committees on our Appropriations Committee, especially in light of the current fiscal restraints and problems we face. The Senator from New Mexico carries that burden and that responsibility with great character and great skill, and I thank him again for an extraordinary piece of workmanship.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry, on behalf of the leadership, as to whether it is possible for us to adopt this conference report so that debate may start on the series of amendments in disagreement. These amendments are debatable. There is no time limit. However, it is not possible for some Members to offer amendments on other matters, amendments in disagreement, until we dispose of the conference report.

I inquire of the Senator from Michigan whether it is possible for us to go to the conference report so that that debate may start. The Senator from Arizona has an amendment. The alternative, of course, is that the Senator from Michigan could debate the conference report on into the night, and other Senators would not be able to get to the matters they have in mind.

I might say that if the Senator has in mind keeping the Senate's attention on this issue, he might be able to rest his voice a little while the others talk for a few hours this morning. But they cannot commence their items until the conference report is adopted.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alaska knows that I want to accommodate every other Member of the Senate, including the Senator from Oregon.

Let there be no misunderstanding as to my goal. I want to accommodate everybody. I have been accommodating everybody for the last 2 months in an effort to get a vote on a critical matter involving students who want to begin school in September.

The leadership on both sides of the aisle have assured me that they would work with me in order to get such a vote. I think they have made good faith efforts to get such a vote. But I must use whatever tools are available to me to try to obtain a vote on my amendment before we go out.

I am not trying to add it to the conference report. There may be some misunderstanding between us from a prior conversation on that matter. What I am seeking is for the leadership to propound a unanimous-consent request that once this conference report is disposed of and we return to this debt limit bill, the pending amendment on the debt limit bill, which is not going to be disposed of this week, be set aside temporarily, so that my amendment can be considered under a strict time limit, disposed of, and then we would return to the other amendment.

There are 22 cosponsors of this amendment. If it is not voted on in August, it will have a lot less effect, because these students are awaiting some signal from us as to whether they can return to school in September.

If I may have the attention of my friend from Oregon for one more moment, there are 300,000 students out there who need this; 50,000 are children of soldiers who were killed in Vietnam. We promised these men before they left that their children would receive this benefit through college. I am trying to preserve that benefit for 1 more year, and all I want is a vote in August. All I want is someone in the leadership to propound the unanimous-consent request so that I can see if I can get a vote.

I will repeat this for the Senator from Oregon: The students we are talking about, in many instances, are the children of soldiers who went to Vietnam, who were promised that if they were killed in Vietnam, their children would receive that social security benefit through college.

This amendment has great meaning in August. It has less meaning in September.

I am trying to find a way, and I have been trying for 2 months, and the leadership has assured me they would help me get a vote. I am trying to find a way to get a vote on this matter before we leave today. I am not trying to add it to this conference report. What I am trying to do is to get the leadership to propound a unanimous-consent request that when we are done with this conference report, we will then set aside the pending amendment on the debt ceiling, take up this amendment, which has 22 cosponsors, for 40 minutes or an hour, get a vote on it, and then return to the Helms amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Michigan that the majority leader is at a meeting downtown, and subsequently there will be a meeting at 10:30 to start planning the program for the Senate when we return.

The Senator's leverage is just as good against the matter before the Senate after the adoption of the conference report as it is before, because we cannot leave this matter until we handle the amendments in disagreement.

All we are asking is that the Senator allow this conference report to be adopted and allow the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from New Mexico and others to discuss the items in disagreement. I can assure the Senator from Michigan that we are not going to leave this matter until the Senator from Michigan has exhausted his statements to the Senate.

I will urge the majority leader to consider the request of the Senator from Michigan, and we will do our best to see what we can do to accommodate him. I am sure the Senator realizes the serious complications in handling the schedule with respect to getting to the debt ceiling bill in the past week. We did not anticipate that the time would be completely exhausted, as it has been, on other matters during this week.

It is possible, for example, that we may be able to consider the Senator's matter as a sense of the Senate resolution, separate from the debt ceiling bill. An amendment to the debt ceiling bill, I can tell the Senator, will not become law until about September 30, in any event. So if he is looking for a vehicle that will become law before September 30, this debt ceiling bill is not the vehicle to which he should address himself, in my opinion.

I urge the Senator again: Let us proceed with the debate on the matters that the other Senators are waiting to debate, and as soon as the majority leader returns, we will confer with the Senator from Michigan to see what can be worked out about his matter.

In any event, the matter of the conference report amendments in disagreement will still be before the Senate, and the Senator will have his opportunity to call the attention of the Senate to the problem he has in mind, after these Senators have presented their discussions on the amendments in disagreement.

Will the Senator from Michigan allow us now to complete action on the conference report and go to the amendments in disagreement?

Mr. LEVIN. I appreciate the words of my friend from Alaska. I want to just go back for one more moment to a prior debt ceiling limit extension. It was a temporary extension in July. At that time I wanted to offer my amendment and did offer my amendment and was persuaded by the majority leader to withdraw my amendment at that time because the permanent debt ceiling limit was going to be coming up soon. I did that.

We now have this bill in front of us. I was assured 2 weeks ago by the majority leader that the debt ceiling bill would be resolved before recess and that my amendment could be voted on during the debt ceiling debate. Obviously that has not been possible and I understand that.

Last night we had discussions on this matter and so the background does become important.

Now, before I can answer the question which the Senator from Alaska has propounded I wish to check with the Parliamentarian, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for not more than 1 minute as if in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOVIETS USING PROHIBITED BIOLOGICAL WARFARE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, for several years I have been exploring and offering legislation dealing with the issue of Soviet violations of the Biological Warfare Convention. One resolution has passed the Senate and House of Representatives on the subject of the Sverdlovsk incident in 1979. A second resolution passed this year on the fiscal year 1983 Defense authorization bill. This called on the President to reopen the Biological Warfare Convention and renegotiate provisions for verification and compliance—features missing from the original text.

The evidence of the use of biological agents in violation of this convention is compelling. And now a new source of convincing data has opened up for Western review and from an unusual source.

That source of new information is the People's Republic of China. They indicate that Chinese troops have died from booby traps dispensing agents that fit the description of the biological materials used in Cambodia.

According to an article in the Boston Globe, the Chinese have shared their information about these incidents with the United States. All signs point toward the use of mycotoxins by the Vietnamese. Mycotoxins probably only can be produced in military quantities in the U.S.S.R.—the Vietnamese ally in battles against Cambodia and the People's Republic of China.

Mr. President, this makes for several conclusions. The first, and most important, is that the U.S.S.R. probably, and I stress the word probably, has broken the Biological Warfare Convention. Second, it indicates the futility of agreeing to treaties that do not contain verification and compliance clauses.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Boston Globe be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston Globe, July 30, 1982]

TOXIC WEAPON USED ON CHINESE?

(By William Beecher)

WASHINGTON—Now comes word that the Vietnamese used deadly chemical warfare agents in 1979 against the invading forces of China.

Diplomatic sources say the use was not widespread but came in an unusual manner. Chinese troops moving down jungle trails in northern Vietnam stumbled over ankle-high tripwires which detonated booby traps hung in overhanging branches. Many of those exposed reportedly got extremely sick and died within a day or two.

The report is potentially significant in two respects.

First off, all previous allegations of banned chemical and biological agents being employed have come from Western, mostly American, officials based in large part on hearsay evidence from illiterate refugees—from Laos, Cambodia and Afghanistan—not from a government whose scientists could analyze what they found used against their army in battle.

And secondly, the description of the type of weapon used to dispense the agents fits with reports of similar devices used against antigovernment forces in Cambodia and supplied, by the Soviet Union, to Cuba more than 10 years ago. That raises the question whether Moscow regards chemical and biological weapons as just another form of conventional weaponry, to be employed when more effective than other standard arms, international agreements to the contrary notwithstanding.

Details are hard to come by since the Chinese have not yet gone public with their evidence and since information about the special booby traps is being closely held in the intelligence community.

But well placed sources say China has discussed its findings with American chemical warfare specialists, in part to compare notes about analytical techniques to identify the agent used. The sources say it appears to have been a deadly mycotoxin called T2 which derives from a fungus known as fusarium.

US sources say two Khmer Rouge guerrillas emerged from a firefight with Vietnamese troops in Cambodia not long ago reporting that the Vietnamese had slipped behind their position and strung up booby traps in the trees. When the Khmer Rouge fell back, they triggered the weapons and became very ill. Blood samples from survivors are said to have contained traces of T2.

The US has publicly alleged that mycotoxins used in Laos and Cambodia by Vietnamese forces are not produced naturally in jungle climates and must have been supplied by the Russians, who have written extensively of research on toxins from fusarium.

Furthermore, some Vietnamese military defectors have told U.S. intelligence they carried Soviet-manufactured chemical munitions toward the China border during the 1979 fight: they said they were told the weapons would be used it China initiated chemical warfare.

Finaly, a Cuban military defector said the identical type of booby trap was supplied by Moscow to Havana in 1970. He did not know what the traps were armed with or whether they were actually employed, for instance, in Angola or Ethiopia by Cuban forces there.

In response to inquiries from a United Nations team investigating alleged use of banned agents, the Soviet Union has provided a report conceding that T2 and other mycotoxins have shown up in Indochina, but they charge the United States is responsible.

The United States, the Russians said, deviously cleared and sterilized large areas of Vietnamese jungle with herbicides and napalm, then seeded the soil with elephant grass, knowing it would provide the breeding ground for fursarium. The spores from the fungi were windblown into Laos and Cambodia, they concluded, causing the deaths blamed on Soviet-supplied weapons.

It is long past due that an independent body of internationally respected scientists conduct a well publicized investigation whose conclusions will not be suspected of ideological bias. Otherwise some of the most repugnant weapons known to man could indeed become widely used "conventional arms."

IN MEMORY OF GORDON RULE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, it is with sorrow and personal regret that I note the death of Gordon Rule, one of our Nation's most respected and authoritative experts on procurement.

I can speak with considerable personal experience about the qualities of Gordon Rule for he appeared several times before me as chairman of the Joint Economic Committee or one of its subcommittees.

I always found Mr. Rule to be an articulate and forceful proponent of the taxpaying public. Often he said things without regard to the political or bureaucratic consequences and this is a characteristic that few in Washington have. Perhaps his comment about Roy L. Ash's nomination to be head of the Nixon administration's Office of Management and Budget makes this most clear. He told my committee that President Eisenhower must be twitching in his grave as a result of the cost overruns which were incurred under Mr. Ash's leadership at Litton Industries. I can tell you that comment caused quite a stir that day but once again he had put truth ahead of personal safety.

Let me say that from time to time I ran afoul of Mr. Rule's perceptions of the right policies to pursue in naval shipbuilding. He used to criticize some of my opinions with the same vigor that he took on the bureaucracy. And that is just one more reason why I respected him so highly. He spoke out. He was not afraid of the consequences. He was a true patriot in that he fought for efficiency in Government and did not tolerate anything less than that total goal of cost-effectiveness at every level of Government.

We need more men and women in Government with the capacity for analysis and the personal courage to speak out like Gordon Rule. The Government has suffered a loss and so too the American taxpayer.

THE PARIS RESTAURANT KILLINGS: CONFRONTING THE ASSUMPTIONS OF HATRED

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, recently, four French citizens and two Americans were killed in a Jewish restaurant in Paris. The world has expressed its strong condemnation of this atrocious act. I would like to add my voice to that chorus of outrage.

Murder, in itself the most heinous of crimes, takes on one of its ugliest aspects in circumstances like these. The six victims were selected at random as the terrorists fired into the crowd. These six people had injured no one. They were not killed because they, as individuals, had harmed any person or any group. They were killed because they were patronizing a Jewish restaurant. They were killed because they were thought to be either Jewish or sympathetic to the Jewish people.

Let us look for a moment at the assumptions behind these killings. First and foremost is the assumption that the taking of life is an appropriate means of expressing a point of view. This assumption is patently wrong and utterly abhorrent. Any individual or group that has feelings to vent may do so through peaceful means. There are no circumstances which would permit the use of violence for that purpose.

Also underlying this crime is the assumption that a commonality of national and religious heritage implies a commonality of political intent. French officials believe that current tensions in France concerning the Middle East crisis are linked to this and other recent anti-Semitic incidents there. The basic mechanism of prejudice is evident in such transferrals of anger from those at its original source to other, uninvolved persons who happen to be of the same race, religion, or nationality. The notion that a shared cultural and religious heritage allows French Jews to be held responsible for the actions of the Israeli Government is repugnant to any civilized conception of equity and fairness.

But the assumptions involved in this ugly crime run deeper than a reaction to current political developments. Apparent in this action is the poisonous idea that cultural differences are somehow more important than the bond of a common humanity, and that such differences are grounds for fear, hatred, and enmity. This idea, so completely irrational and so terribly tragic, is nevertheless widespread, strong, and dangerous. It is and always will be a reality.

These assumptions are not confined to one terrorist organization, nor to one nation, one point in time, or one group of victims. These beliefs are everywhere; they are hidden in the dark recesses of all human minds. They may be dormant, they may be deeply buried, but in times of great tension they can be stirred to life. We must recognize this fact, we must confront it, and we must control it.

That is why we need the Genocide Convention. Because the same assumptions, the same beliefs that led to six deaths in a Paris restaurant also led to 6 million deaths in Nazi concentration camps. The difference is not one of substance, but of degree. Those who are willing to kill even one member of a group merely because of his/her membership in that group, may well be willing to kill a great many.

The U.S. Senate should not wait for that to happen. Six deaths is six too many; let us take every step, no matter how small, to see that the killing stops there. I urge the Senate to add the support of the United States to the treaty that seeks to prevent such killing: the International Genocide Convention.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

DR. LOYAL DAVIS

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, yesterday, unfortunately, Dr. Loyal Davis, the father of Mrs. Reagan, passed away in my hometown where he and his dear wife Edie have lived for many, many years.

Dr. Loyal Davis is one of the most eminent neurologists who has ever lived, the first neurologist to practice in the city of Chicago, and a man dedicated to the improvement of surgery not only in his own specialized field but in the whole gamut of surgery as practiced around the world.

He was a wonderful man, a wonderful father, and I just wish to say to the Senate that this country has lost one of its most outstanding citizens, not that he happened to be the stepfather or father, as I call him, of Mrs. Reagan, but a man whose qualities have been known to me for many, many, many years, and the country is going to miss him.

I wish to express the condolences of my family and my entire State to Mrs. Reagan and to Mrs. Loyal Davis.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I am happy to yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am delighted to join in tribute to Dr. Davis. My father was a doctor in the Chicago area and knew Dr. Davis and had the greatest admiration and respect for his great skill as a doctor, fine personality, and great integrity.

LABOR DEPARTMENT STUDY GIVES REASONS FOR FAILURE TO ENFORCE ERISA EFFECTIVELY

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, for the past several years, first as chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations and now as its ranking minority member, I have criticized the U.S. Department of Labor for the manner in which it has carried out its duties under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act, ERISA.

It has been my view, as well as the view of other members of the subcommittee, that the Labor Department has not been diligent in protecting the rights of union members who belong to, or are beneficiaries of, pension and welfare plans.

The subcommittee has had special interest in the Central States Pension Fund of the Teamsters Union. The subcommittee, in its report of August 3, 1981, accused the Labor Department of poor management and mistaken judgment in the Government's 6-year, $8 million investigation of alleged questionable conduct by trustees and administrators of the Central States fund.

An important criticism leveled at the Labor Department was that it had failed to examine properly the allegation that organized crime figures and their surrogates had influenced management of the fund and that the result of organized crime's control was that large amounts of money had been looted through questionable and illegal loans and other transactions.

The subcommittee found that instead of directing a professional, procedurally sound investigation of allegations of questionable and illegal conduct, the Labor Department deliberately ignored evidence of criminal wrongdoing and rushed into a civil suit against fund trustees, thereby eliminating the possibility that recipients of fund loans and other culpable third parties would be brought to justice for the alleged widespread looting of the fund. The civil suit against former trustees of the fund is still in the court.

The U.S. General Accounting Office, asked by the subcommittee to evaluate the Department's investigation, came to conclusions similar to those reached by the subcommittee. In certain areas, GAO's criticism was more hard hitting than the subcommittee's. GAO also took a close look at the actuarial soundness of the fund and concluded that, because of past management practices, the fund's financial condition was not as good as it might have been. "Thinly funded" was the way GAO characterized the $3.4 billion corpus, one of the largest multiemployer pension plans in the Nation. The fund's unfunded liability as of January 1, 1980 was $6.05 billion.

A point of contention between the subcommittee and the Labor Department had to do with the mandate ERISA gave the Department to pursue criminal violations. The Department claimed it had very limited responsibility to investigate criminal activity in pension and welfare plans. The subcommittee disagreed, contending that ERISA intended for the Department to move against criminal violations with the same intensity that it was to attack civil infractions of the pension reform statute.

GAO, the Justice Department and the Library of Congress sided with the subcommittee in the debate over the Labor Department's obligation under ERISA to detect, investigate and make proper referral to Federal prosecuters of criminal violations in pension and welfare plans.

Finally, after several years of dispute over this point, Raymond J. Donovan, who took over as Secretary of Labor in 1981, testified before the subcommittee that his department did have the duty to detect, investigate and make proper referral of allegations of criminal activity in pension plans.

I have commended Secretary Donovan and his aides for their recognition of the proper role of the Department as directed by ERISA.

I also commend Secretary Donovan for commissioning a study within the Labor Department which examined the effectiveness of the Department in enforcing ERISA.

The May 1, 1982, study, entitled, "Evaluation and Recommendations, ERISA Enforcement," was sponsored jointly by the Department's Office of the Inspector General and the Labor Management Services Administration. The study was made available to the subcommittee. It is an important document for two reasons. First, it reveals in precise language why the Department has not been able to enforce ERISA effectively. Second, it offers practical and sensible recommendations on how the Department can enforce ERISA as Congress intended.

The study's recommendations include proposals to improve communication between the Washington headquarters of the Labor Department and its regional and area offices; devote more investigative resources to detecting and making inquiry into reported ERISA and title 18 violations; make more efficient the Department's use of information filed in annual reports by pension and welfare plans; improve training of investigators; and develop a better system for litigating alleged ERISA violations.

The Labor Department study, the result of a 3-month, 10-person inquiry, notes that ERISA cites six criminal acts for which it provides penalties. They are first, the embezzlement and theft of pension fund moneys; second, false reporting; third, kickbacks; fourth, criminals serving in fiduciary positions; fifth, violations of ERISA-mandated reporting and disclosure rules; and sixth, unlawful efforts to deny fund beneficiaries or participants their rights by force or violence. The new Labor Department study then goes on to say:

> The legislative history of ERISA indicates that Congress considered the six criminal acts specified to be so threatening and so dangerous to the rights of participants and beneficiaries that it prohibited them under threat of fines, imprisonment and debarment. Civil remedies only were provided for the other prohibited transactions and for breaches of fiduciary duty.
> The legislative history of ERISA also indicates that Congress considered the six criminal acts so threatening and so dangerous that it expected that plans, programs and strategy would be devised to seek out instances where theft, embezzlement, false statements, bribery, kickbacks, etc. existed. DOL (Department of Labor) was given broad powers under the Act: it was given the power to specify and require reports; to examine books and records; to call witnesses; to hold hearings and much more. Congress expected DOL to exercise a leadership role, acting alone and with other government agencies, to develop on a continuing basis the plans, programs and strategies to detect, investigate, litigate and prosecute not only prohibited transactions and fiduciary violations covered by civil remedies in the Act, but also the criminal acts punishable by fines, imprisonment and debarment.

With the above statement setting out in no uncertain terms the responsibilities of the Labor Department in criminal matters under ERISA, the May 1, 1982, study then details the organizational, procedural, and professional shortcomings in the Department that rendered it incapable of enforcing ERISA properly.

The study found that:

First. Since 1978, the number of personnel assigned to the ERISA program declined 29 percent, raising questions as to the adequacy of available resources.

Second. Investigating agents, working under the Labor Department's pension welfare benefit program, are hired, fired, transferred, promoted, and disciplined by another section of the Department. This causes an organizationally confusing situation in which the officials vested with responsibility to enforce criminal and civil law regarding pension and welfare plans have limited authority over the agents in the field who carry out the enforcement.

Third. Too many levels of review are imposed between the agent in the field investigating the alleged violations and Labor Department officials who are responsible for action. In the field, the agent's report of investigation is reviewed, in this order, by his "Track Supervisor," the Deputy Area Administrator, the Area Administrator, the Deputy Assistant Regional Administrator, the Assistant Regional Administrator and the Regional Administrator. Then, once those six levels of officers have reviewed the report of investigation, it is sent to Washington where it is read, in this order, by an analyst, the Regional Coordinator, the Chief of Fiduciary Standards and Investigations, the Assistant Administrator for the Office of Enforcement and the Solicitor's Office. In many cases, years have gone by before the Labor Department completed its review process and decided how to respond to reported ERISA violations.

Fourth. Labor Department policy, as spelled out in official publications, is that criminal violations in pension and welfare funds are to have the lowest priority in allocation of investigative resources. A January 1978 Labor Department manual, entitled, "PWBP (pension welfare benefit program) Compliance Strategy Document," stated:

> Criminal investigation cannot be allowed to displace the civil investigative efforts required under ERISA.

The manual added:

> Criminal investigations by PWBP personnel (agent) are to be minimized.

In addition, agents were directed to spend 85 percent of their time investigating a limited range of alleged civil violations. Agents were discouraged from working with U.S. attorneys in the investigation of criminal cases. The study found that most Labor Department agents believed that the Department's enforcement policy discouraged or sought to prevent them from detecting and investigating criminal violations of ERISA and title 18. Because of the inordinate focus on civil inquiry, the study concluded:

Based on the field interviews and the documents reviewed, the (reviewing) committee has concluded that no federal agency including DOL is presently conducting a program to find ERISA criminal violations. With the emphasis on noncriminal cases in the present ERISA enforcement policy, the committee is of the opinion that the Department is not fulfilling its responsibility under ERISA to provide a balanced enforcement program. . . . The committee believes that the present enforcement resources are grossly inadequate.

Fifth. ERIAS violation cases, along with title 18 criminal cases in the pension and welfare fund field, are managed poorly. Leads uncovered by agents' investigations are not developed fully. Preliminary information indicating criminal wrongdoing is not pursued or referred to the Justice Department promptly. The study cited delays of 18 months and longer from the time an agent's report of investigation is filed until the Solicitor's Office makes a judgment as to how the Department should proceed. Inadequate attention is paid to the "Statute of Limitation" on both criminal and civil cases. The following cases were used as examples of poor case management:

In May of 1980, evidence was developed indicating that an investment advisor to a pension plan was receiving kickbacks. The possibility of using the Federal kickback statute (18 U.S.C. 664) was not raised at all levels of review of the case. A local district attorney now has the case under investigation.

In December 1977, information was developed indicating that a plan administrator might have embezzled funds in violation of 18 U.S.C. 664. The case was not brought to the attention of the Justice Department for 18 months.

In July of 1975, an agent found evidence that employees of a firm were being fired to prevent them from participating in a pension and profit-sharing plan. This is a potential violation of section 510 of ERISA. In that same month, the case was referred to the Solicitor's Office in the Labor Department in Washington. Today—6½ years later—the case is still pending in the Solicitor's Office. The Solicitor still has not decided what to do with it.

In March of 1980, it was alleged that a plan administrator had misappropriated more than $40,000 in plan funds. Civil action was initiated by a plan participant. A judgment was entered against the administrator in October of 1980 as a result of the civil action. But the criminal aspect of the case—the alleged embezzlement of plan funds—was not referred to the Justice Department until February of 1981.

In June of 1979, the Labor Department received a complaint that the total assets of a pension plan had been loaned to the plan sponsor to pay off a bank loan. The bank was a trustee of the plan. Nine months later—in March of 1980—an agent was assigned to investigate. Seventeen months later—in August of 1981—the agent's report of investigation was transmitted to the Office of Enforcement. The report recommended removal of the trustees; repayment of the loan with interest; and distribution to participants. In August of 1981, the Solicitor's Office, which now had the file, requested additional inquiry. In the field, the Regional Administrator objected to further inquiry, saying that Washington officials would never do anything on the case anyway and that the best that could be hoped for was voluntary corrective action by the fund trustees. In September of 1981, the Solicitor's Office initiated additional investigation. Subpenas were served for records. Depositions were taken. The case file does not reveal what documents the subpenas produced or copies of the depositions. By February of 1982, the Solicitor's Office had decided not to take legal action against the plan's trustees but to send them a letter proposing voluntary corrective steps. No further action was taken by the Department.

In March of 1978, the Labor Department received information that a welfare fund had made imprudent loans and that the fund had not filed reports with the Department as required by ERISA. In October of 1980, a report of investigation was filed in the Department of Labor's regional office setting forth evidence of improper loans amounting to $1.5 million. The report of investigation made its way to Washington where it was referred to the Solicitor's Office early in 1981. The Solicitor's Office has taken no action. The case file indicates that first, a private suit has been filed against the fund and the trustees; second, allegations were received of possible criminal acts by the former fund administrator; and third, there is no documentation that any of this information was referred formally to the Justice Department, only the undocumented "understanding" that the matter was sent to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in an "informal" manner.

In June of 1970, Labor Department investigators opened a case in which pension fund irregularities were alleged. In June of 1980, a report of investigation was filed indicating that fund trustees purchased stock of the sponsor company at a price in excess of market value; that life insurance was purchased on the company president, with the beneficiary being his estate and not the plan; that the trustees failed to keep minutes of their meetings; and that the plan was bonded inadequately. It was recommended to the Solicitor's Office in October of 1980 that litigation be initiated. Seven months later—in May of 1981—the Solicitor's Office rejected the recommendation, saying:

We concur with a finding that certain ERISA violations have occurred. However, we believe the matter should be referred to IRS.

Sixth. Agents and other Labor Department officials outside Washington said litigation based on ERISA is not initiated in a timely fashion. This is regrettable because litigation is considered an effective means to protect fund assets and recover assets already diverted. In several cases, however, assets were not protected or were jeopardized because of the Labor Department's failure to have a more aggressive and comprehensive litigation strategy. Frequently, the assets which are not protected and placed in jeopardy involve relatively small plans. Because cases are litigated infrequently, several Labor Department officials said they had settled cases for less financial compensation than the plans were entitled to since this was the best deal they could get for the plans.

Seventh. The ability of the Labor Department to detect ERISA violations was called into question. Labor Department officials said there was no nationwide Department program to detect cases of deliberate failure to submit reports, or the willful submission of false reports. Also noted is the failure of the Department to detect other ERISA violations, as well as title 18 violations.

Eighth. There is general agreement among agents and other field officials involved in ERISA enforcement that investigative personnel are trained insufficiently. The Labor Department's policy regarding agents' training requirements is unclear and there appears to be no organized approach to training.

Ninth. In five of the six Labor Department Regional Offices, strong criticism was leveled at the Solicitor's Office. The Solicitor was faulted for first, excessive delays, sometimes of 2 and 3 years' duration, in deciding on whether to bring litigation; second, giving self-serving or illogical reasons for refusing to litigate; third, intervening in on-going cases and negotiating settlements unilaterally without consulting with the pension welfare benefit program; fourth, showing no interest in cases which had required long periods of investigation by agents; fifth, having no interest in litigating reporting violations; and sixth, failing to furnish guidance on statute of limitation problems.

Tenth. The Labor Department has not organized itself in such a way as to make efficient use of pension and welfare fund annual reports. Computerized data from reports is not used efficiently to detect ERISA violations. The Department has no program to flag delinquent reports. When it did try to install such a program, it failed, sending out hundreds of thousands of letters falsely accusing plans of reporting violations, only to learn that the notices went to plans which were in compliance. The study notes:

A serious question can be raised as to how DOL can be expected to enforce the other provisions of ERISA if it cannot enforce its basic requirement on plans to file annual reports.

The last major violation detection effort made by the Labor Department was in March of 1981 when the data reviewed was 1978 annual reports. When this effort was made, 40,000 pension plans were reviewed and more than 14,000 possible violations were found. But when the results of the "targeting run" were sent to the field for inquiry, they were rejected by agents and officials on the grounds that the data was 3 years old.

In summary, Mr. President, this Labor Department internal report demonstrates the fact that for the last 7 years—the entire life of the historic 1974 pension reform statute—the Department of Labor has fallen far short of proper enforcement of the law.

The internal report makes clear what the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations has been saying—namely, that the Labor Department has not met its responsiblity to protect pension and welfare funds against criminal exploitation. Unfortunately, it has taken the Department 7 years to realize the full extent of what Congress intended. Pension and welfare funds have been exposed needlessly to the threat of looting. Now, having recognized previous failures, the Labor Department should take steps to carry out corrective action.

This new report indicates that the Labor Department is coming to recognize its own important role in enforcing ERISA. This is a detailed and frank appraisal of the problems the Department must correct if it is to improve its enforcement of ERISA. This is an encouraging document because it shows that, finally, the Department is facing up to its responsibilities in regard to pension and welfare funds and that it is prepared to initiate the necessary corrective action. I commend Secretary Donovan and his aides associated with the preparation of this report.

CRIME CONTROL ACT OF 1982 TITLE IV—HABEAS CORPUS REFORM

(By request of Mr. NUNN, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, we are now entering the fourth month that Senator NUNN and I have come to the floor of the Senate each day to urge our colleagues to pass legislation to fight crime and to reform our criminal justice system. We have two crime fighting bills on the Senate Calendar right now, and by passing either one of those proposals, the Senate would be taking an important step forward in the battle to make our communities safe for law abiding citizens. I am encouraged by the fact that both bills have received broad bipartisan support. But I am dismayed because, despite this support, and despite the fact that the bills have been on the Senate Calendar for almost 3 months, the Senate has not yet acted to pass them. In the meantime, the end of this session draws closer and closer. In fact, we have as few as 22 days remaining in this session of Congress, which makes it imperative that we act promptly on crime fighting measures if we are to have any chance of putting tough new laws on the books this year.

Mr. President, a recent poll disclosed that over 70 percent of the American people have little or no confidence in the ability of our courts to convict and sentence criminals. I believe that this lack of public confidence in our criminal justice system is well founded, and that reform of our courts is essential to the fight against crime. One important aspect of this court reform must be establishing more finality in our criminal justice system, and that means doing something about the endless number of appeals a prisoner is able to file under today's Federal habeas corpus statutes. Once again, we have the opportunity to reform our habeas laws, and to establish more finality in our criminal justice by acting on either one of two habeas reform proposals now pending on the Senate Calendar. Title 4 of S. 2543, a bill that Senator NUNN and I introduced, contains habeas reform measures. Another habeas reform bill, S. 2838, was introduced by Senator THURMOND and was placed on the Senate Calendar this past Tuesday. Both Senator NUNN and myself are cosponsors of that reform proposal.

Mr. President, the movement to reform our inadequate habeas laws continues to grow and to gain momentum. Recently, Mr. Frank Kelley, the attorney general of the State of Michigan, sent a letter of support for habeas corpus reform. He joins the many others involved in our criminal justice system who have called on us to act to restore the writ of habeas corpus to its original purpose. I would like to share some of the points Attorney General Kelley raised in his letter with my colleagues. He stated and I quote:

An overview of federal habeas corpus litigation in Michigan reveals that the majority of petitions . . . are frivolous in nature. I am informed that of the twelve hundred habeas applications filed in Michigan since 1977, only seven have required issuance of the Great Writ. Another troubling fact is that many of the petitions seek review of issues already examined in detail and rejected by Michigan's corrective tribunals. The all too frequent result, therefore, is duplication of effort and unnecessary expenditure of state and federal funds. For these reasons, I have become convinced that the statute under which habeas actions are brought should be modified so as to promote the state's interests in finality in the criminal process and the preservation of limited state economic resources. These interests must, of course, be balanced against the vital individual interests historically protected by habeas corpus. It is my view that the administration's [habeas reform] proposals adequately protect and promote these essential interests.

I agree with Attorney General Kelley that the present habeas system creates an unnecessary and unwarranted burden on both our Federal and our State court systems. I also agree with another point that he makes in his letter, and that concerns the need for Federal courts to give recognition to the competence of our State courts to examine and determine constitutional issues. It is my belief that our State courts are fully capable of assuring that each individual who is on trial receives the constitutional protections he is guaranteed. In fact, as Attorney General Kelley points out, some State courts, like the Michigan courts, actually give criminal defendants rights that are in excess of those mandated by the Constitution. Nevertheless, under our present habeas laws, we end up with a system in which the Federal courts review practically each and every aspect of the State court criminal trial.

Mr. President, the Senate has an opportunity to heed the calls for reform which have been raised by persons from across the country, and to reform our habeas corpus laws. We can do that, but only if we act promptly to pass the habeas reform legislation which is now ready to be considered by the Senate. There is no reason for further delay. I urge my colleagues to act now.●

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of the conference report on S. 6863.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I would first like to thank the distinguished ranking member of the Transportation Subcommittee, Senator CHILES, for his help with this bill. His support and cooperation has been outstanding.

Mr. President, I recommend this bill to my colleagues for passage as a responsible and essential mechanism addressing the supplemental funding needs for the 1982 fiscal year. This bill is nearly $2 billion under the President's request and provides the necessary pay and operations funding to keep the Government operational through the end of the fiscal year.

Included in the transportation portion of this bill is $111 million for the Coast Guard and $203 million for the FAA. I have been told by the Department of Transportation that if this money is not made available, Coast Guard facilities will have to be curtailed and in some cases closed around the first week in September.

Mr. President, I point out to you and my colleagues that we all anticipate being back in our States over the Labor Day weekend. I say as chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee there are few, if any, Coast Guard facilities in North Dakota but there are many Coast Guard facilities in the States of our colleagues. I can imagine the number of telephone calls and concerned inquiries Senators are going to get if those search and rescue stations and other Coast Guard facilities are shut down over the Labor Day weekend.

In the case of the FAA, furloughs would be required across the country at all levels of operations. These events would both come during the increase in recreation and travel activity which occurs around the Labor Day weekend.

Mr. President, the only other major program which needs to be highlighted in these brief remarks is the interstate transfer grant program for highways. Although the conference agreement includes $112.5 million for this program, let me say that we have not even begun to meet the $1 billion need for ready-to-go highway construction projects to be funded out of this account, nor the $5.7 billion total outstanding commitment the Federal Government has to the States and local jurisdictions through this program.

Mr. President, the legislative process is one of compromise and the administration must also participate in this compromise. I know the administration has some reservation about the way funds in this bill have been distributed, but its passage is essential to keep vital transportation safety components working. I am, therefore, not only recommending to my colleagues that they pass this bill, but I am also announcing my support for it, to the point of committing my vote to override any possible veto of this bill because I think it is extremely important that we have it passed and on the books before we move into this Labor Day weekend.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, now may I address the question to the distinguished Senator from Michigan as to whether it would be possible to proceed to adopt the conference report so that we might have the discussion on the amendment in disagreement?

Mr. LEVIN. Before I answer the inquiry, I do wish to make sure that there is no misunderstanding about one thing that I said before. The majority leader as always has kept his word on this matter but what the majority leader told me and what I think I indicated before is that he would attempt to get a vote on this amendment prior to the August recess.

The majority leader has certainly made that attempt and is now making that attempt, I presume. The majority leader has in all respects carried out his word. He also indicated to me it was his hope and belief that we could complete the debt ceiling bill prior to going out in August, and there is no doubt that that was his belief at the time he so expressed it.a

So let there be no misunderstanding, the majority leader has certainly carried out his commitment in all respects and is now attempting to continue to do so.

I am unable to have the conference report voted on because I believe it would lose the opportunity for me to make some extensive remarks on what I believe is a matter which must be resolved in a timely fashion.

What I am asking for is that a unanimous-consent request be propounded to allow me to bring up this amendment after the disposition of the conference report. That is all I seek. I am not seeking to hold up this conference report. I am seeking to have another urgent matter voted on today. So I am unable to agree with the request from the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, did the Senator from Vermont have a colloquy he wished to pursue?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alaska will yield, the Senator from Vermont wants to have a colloquy with the manager of the bill, Senator HATFIELD, within 2 or 3 minutes, as soon as the Senator comes on the floor. It will be a short colloquy.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYAKAWA). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I believe my colleague from the State of Vermont, Mr. STAFFORD, has some questions.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I do have a question and some observations to address to the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD).

Mr. President, I would like to discuss with my good friend from Oregon, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, one of the provisions of the conference agreement on the supplemental appropriations bill. Senator HATFIELD, as you are aware, the conferees agreed to an amendment offered by myself and Senator LEAHY which would have provided $300,000 for two Vermont institutions of higher education. I want to clarify with you the intent of my amendment, which was offered because of new authorizing language contained in H.R. 6863 changing the distribution formula for the $5.2 million provided in supplemental funds for the title III program. Two Vermont institutions, the Community College of Vermont and Castleton State College, were already ranked on a list of title III eligible institutions and could have qualified for funding if the supplemental bill had been approved without restrictive language that had been added by the committee.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator from Vermont is correct in his statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the reason why the committee inserted the new language, in order to insure that institutions which serve large numbers of Hispanic and native American students receive adequate funding under title III. In order to insure equity for my Vermont institutions, however, I offered my amendment to make certain that these two Vermont institutions—Castleton State College and the Community College of Vermont—will receive funding as designated in my amendment.

I am hopeful that the compromise which was worked out by the conferees is one which pleases all involved, and I especially want to thank both the distinguished chairman of the full Appropriations Committee, Senator HATFIELD, and my friend from New Mexico, Senator SCHMITT, the chairman of the subcommittee, for their invaluable assistance in this effort.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am delighted to be able to clarify the amendment with the Senator from Vermont. I want to assure him we will pursue it, and I appreciate his leadership on the subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am very grateful to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee for his cooperation.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, before we complete action on the conference report on the regular supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6863, I would like to clarify the purpose of the $11.1 million that is provided in this bill for the transfer of the BIA day schools to the State of Alaska.

Alaska has been working with the Bureau since statehood in accepting the transfer of BIA schools at the rate of two or three a year. Our State has already assumed $80 million in construction costs alone associated with the transfer of these schools over the years.

I would point out to the Senate that Alaska is the only State that is proceeding to carry out its commitment to provide quality education for its children and not rely upon the Federal Government through the BIA program, to provide educational opportunities for our native children.

The purpose of the funding in this bill is to help the State meet the substantial repair and renovation costs associated with the transfer of these schools.

A long time ago, the beginning of our period of statehood, the Federal Government agreed to bring the schools up to total standards before they were transferred to the State. Now the schools will be opening in less than 3 weeks and many of the schools being transferred do not meet the uniform building, fire, and sanitary code requirements for public buildings. Our State schools do meet these requirements but the Federal Government has not complied with them. This funding will assist or will help assist the State in opening the schools on time and in a safe condition, and primarily in meeting the fire and safety codes that I think ought to be at least bare minimum for the operation of schools in the remote areas such as these are.

In providing funds to Alaska, it is not the intention of Congress to effect the legal rights of one of the schools, Goodnews Bay, to contest the Department of Interior's decision to transfer this school to the State.

This act does not mandate the transfer of those schools. It provides the funds to assist in the transfer. The problems related to the transfer must be worked out by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the State of Alaska, and the village involved.

I thank the Chair and I suggest the absence of a quorum. I withhold that.

Mr. ABDNOR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, chapter 13 of the supplemental appropriations bill for 1982 is the responsibility of my subcommittee. In the opinion of my ranking minority member and myself, we have provided the absolute necessities required by the agencies during the remaining balance of this fiscal year. Senator DECONCINI and I were as frugal as possible. However, it must be remembered that the two biggest items in our chapter are mandatory. We had to provide $303,257,000 for the civil service retirement and disability fund. Additionally, we had to provide $303,806,000 for the annuitants and Federal employees health benefits plan.

Mr. President, I have heard rumors that the President might veto this bill. A veto would be the height of folly because if his health benefit money is not available by August 20, the health insurance carriers can declare their insurance plans void and refuse medical coverage to over 9 million people. Such an event would prove catastrophic and be a breach of faith for those individuals who presumed they were covered by health insurance.

Mr. President, there is money in my chapter of this bill for the personal security of the President and security of the White House office complex. This consideration alone makes it absolutely imperative this supplemental be enacted as soon as possible.

Mr. President, this legislation is not, I repeat and emphasize not, budget-busting legislation. It is far below the President's own budget. We in Congress have kept the faith. We have held down spending in this bill. It is now time for the executive branch to keep faith with Congress and insure that this bill becomes law immediately.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, what is the status of the pending measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the conference report on H.R. 6863.

Mr. HATFIELD. Is the matter open for further discussion or debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEVIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this conference report contains many needed items. I intend to vote for this conference report when it is put before the Senate.

There is another critical question which we have to resolve before we leave today. It is a question which we delayed resolving for month after month in the U.S. Senate. It is a matter which is time critical. The matter will appear very different to us in September than it does in August. Unlike some of the other matters which we have been debating in recent days, unlike the amendment on the debt ceiling bill relative to abortion, relative to prayer, which we cannot resolve and will not resolve before we leave today, there is a matter which we should resolve before we leave today.

It is a matter that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate and hope that a way can be found that we can vote on this today after we dispose of the conference report. And that is a matter involving about a quarter of a million students in this country whose parents, for the most part, are no longer here to fight for their rights because they are gone. These are parents that were promised that if they died, whether here or in the war in Vietnam, that their children would receive the social security benefit promised to them through college. That was a solemn promise that we made to people who are no longer here to remind us of it. And unless we have an opportunity to vote and to preserve the social security student benefits for this year, that is a promise which this Government will break. And again we will be breaking it to people who are no longer here to fight back.

Forty-five thousand of these students are orphans of soldiers who were killed in Vietnam. When they went to Vietnam, they were assured that if they did not come back, that this social security benefit would be there for their children in the decades ahead. They had a right to rely on that commitment of this Government, and I presume that many or most of them did rely on that commitment.

About 200,000 of these students are the children of other persons who made contributions to our social security system with the same assurance; that if they died or became disabled, that the survivor benefit or the social security benefit to which they were entitled would continue for their children through college.

Mr. President, there are a lot of needs that are contained in this conference report. The Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Wisconsin have worked hard on this conference report and I want to commend them on it. I think my relationship with both of them is such that they know that it would be a fairly significant moral question which would be involved for me to raise it in this fashion. But there is a significant moral question which is involved, and that is whether or not we are going to have an opportunity to vote—just to vote—on the question of whether we preserve a benefit for these students, these quarter of a million students who are out there waiting for some kind of guidance from this Congress.

Hearings have been held on this matter in both Houses. Extensive hearings have shown over and over and over again the kind of reliance that was placed on this student benefit. And I believe that this Senate can keep this commitment to at least vote, vote before school starts in September, as to whether or not we want to keep this commitment for 1 additional year.

I wish to read to you the testimony of Mrs. Alice James, of Chestertown, Md., before the House Subcommittee on Post-Secondary Education. She testified as follows:

Mr. Chairman and members of the subcommittee. I am Alice James.

I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you to discuss the impact of the elimination of survivor benefits for college students. I shall read my testimony.

I teach in Chestertown, Md.—English to the Kent School, and writing at Washington College, and am the widow of a scholar who taught at Washington College for 25 years. But it is not as an educator that I am here today; it is as the parent of four students aged 15 to 21. As a widowed parent I must convey to you the plight of not just my own children, but of thousands like them who may be unjustly deprived of the benefits their dead parents earned for them, the benefits which would enable them to contribute their talents and skills to our society.

Let me explain the impact of the cuts on my own family. My oldest child will graduate from college in May. Until recently she had expected to go on to graduate school, preparing herself for a career in teaching or a related field. As a result of the extraordinary stress the cuts will impose on our family, she is shelving her plans and looking for a job. I pray that she will find one. Her father earned his Ph. D. I have an M.A. You can imagine how I feel about this derailment of her professional goals.

My second child is in her second year of college; she too wants to be a teacher. In the next year her annual income from social security will be reduced 50 percent. This year she received 12 checks for $238. During her junior year she will receive eight checks for $178. Her financial planning was predicated on the continued availability of both social security benefits and guaranteed student loans. She is to lose $1,900 in social security, and perhaps $2,000 in loans. How shall we compensate for the loss of $3,900? Which of the other programs will cover our loss?

When she returned to college after Christmas she thought her funding would only be reduced by 25 percent of her annual total. I am ashamed to admit that although I have talked to her since this document arrived on Wednesday, January 27, I have not told her the enormity of her loss. We talked on her 20th birthday. She told me that she missed her father, that she needed him to give her a hug and say. "Your old man is proud of you." Which of you could have delivered another blow? What do you think I should say to her now?

My son is 17. He would be a senior in high school but for a back injury sustained in the spring of his sophomore year. It was misdiagnosed and mistreated for 4 weeks. Finally, he was hospitalized. After another week of painful testing and anxiety, the doctors discovered that their 15-year-old patient had ruptured a disc in his lower back. Summer study was not possible because of lingering pain and the distracting discomfort of a heavy brace. He needed to repeat his sophomore year. Consequently he is not among the high school seniors scrambling to enroll in college program before May 1.

Extend the deadline. Do all you can to help the multitude of youngsters who cannot help themselves. But even if the deadline is extended to June 1, my boy will be deprived of social security benefits for his college education. On the PSAT he scored in the 94th percentile. Which of you wants to tell him that his education is jeopardized by these cuts?

I must add that his hero is the late David K. E. Bruce, envoy to China, ambassador to many European countries, negotiator at the Paris peace talks. He wants to emulate that distinguished career of service to this country. Which of you wants to tell him that his country does not need his services?

And now my youngest daughter, at 15 an enthusiastic sophomore in a stiff college preparatory program. I worry that she will lose her motivation to excel. On the one hand, she knows that her father and I would want her to work as hard as she could to go on to the best college that would take her; on the other hand, she sees what the financial stress is doing to me. What can I do to assure her that somehow we will find a way for her to pursue a career in architecture?

There are thousands of children like mine around the country. There are students who are asking for the benefits their dead parents earned for them. They are asking for help with their education in order that they may contribute to society, not become a drain on it. I wish their mothers could join me here, for I am a weak spokesman for a group of citizens with so few votes. I wish these students themselves could march on Washington and demonstrate outside your doors. But the administration has picked on a silent minority devoid of political clout.

Must I remind you that the G.I. bill and other educational programs have proved that they are a wise investment that pays dividends through the increased productivity and wage-earning capacity of the recipient?

Must I remind you that responsible parents like my husband took the social security program into consideration when they examined their life insurance coverage? And just as they expected their insurance companies to honor their commitment to a prearranged program, so too they expected the government of their country to honor its commitment. Because my husband and his employer were compelled to contribute to the social security program, he could not afford the additional life insurance that would otherwise compensate us for the loss of social security coverage.

Congress has robbed these children of the educational opportunities their parents earned for them. It has also robbed them of faith in their government. I beg of you—restore their funding; restore their faith in their country.

Mr. President, there was a double error made this year.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I would be happy to yield if I can get unanimous consent that I can yield without losing my right to the floor and it will not count as a second speech when I return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I will simply ask, if in the event he secures his wish and the majority leader should get unanimous consent for a vote today on the Senator's amendment on the debt limit bill, and if that amendment should prevail, what is the Senator's answer to the expectation on the part of all of us that we will not act on the debt limit bill until we come back, that then it has to go to conference with the House, that the House could easily strip off this amendment, or that it could be vetoed by the President even if the House passed it and we pass the conference report? At any rate, there is no way that these students would be able to receive these benefits until September in any event, and probably not until October. Therefore, getting a vote on it today would not advance their interests. Why, in these circumstances, not wait until we come back to vote on this?

Mr. LEVIN. For two reasons. One, we will have done everything we can do before they have to make a decision as to whether to try to go to college this fall.

No. 2, there are many people who have to make a decision as to whether or not to borrow money to go to college. That decision can be affected in August by whether or not the Senate decides in August that it wants to continue this benefit for an additional year.

Mr. PROXMIRE. That decision would still be conditioned on acceptance by the House and on the President signing the debt limit bill into law. As we all know, it is likely to be amended with amendments that might not be acceptable at all to the President. Under these circumstances, it would simply provide maybe a modest, very limited hope for these students that they might be able to get this support. Is that right?

Mr. LEVIN. Exactly. It is such a modest, limited hope, but it is important.

No. 3, this matter will appear differently in September to us than it will in August.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Does the Senator not see——

Mr. LEVIN. If I could finish my thought, this matter will appear differently to us in September when the school year has already started than it will in August when the school year has not begun,

Mr. PROXMIRE. But it would have a cruel effect on students if we pass it now, today, with the expectation of the Senate having acted on it it would become law and they go ahead and make commitments and then it does fall in conference, or it does not get the approval of the President. Under those circumstances, they will be in the position of having made commitments and they are not able to realize the benefits,

Mr. LEVIN. I have talked to enough Members of the House who are very confident that if the Senate passes this bill, it will be passed by the House.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Will the Senator permit me to follow this up just a little bit more? I am also concerned about what might happen in these cases. We now have quite a different situation than we had 5 or 10 years ago. We have guaranteed student loans and we have other opportunities for students to finance their education. If a student, in the expectation that he would be able to get this social security assistance the Senator is pursuing so vigorously, forgoes getting a guaranteed student loan or forgoes using some of the other opportunities that he might have to advance his education, would that not disserve him?

Mr. LEVIN. I do not presume that anybody would forgo seeking all alternatives because it is still an uncertainty. Of course, there is enough uncertainlty so that I presume these students would seek all other options in any event.

Let me just add a double injustice of this year, not just the underlying injustice that we are taking away a commitment that we made to students whose parents are gone, 50,000 of whom were killed in Vietnam. This year there is a double injustice because the Social Security Administration sent out the wrong information. Two of the six offices of the Social Security Administration sent out erroneous information as to whether or not these benefits would be available to these students. They sent out information to these high school seniors that this program had been terminated. In fact, the student had to matriculate in college by May 1 in order for the student to continue to get the benefit of this program.

So there was a double mistake. There is the underlying inequity which this amendment, which now has 23 sponsors, would correct for 1 year, in a limited way, but there is a double inequity this year. The Government erred and misled the high school seniors in one out of three cases into believing that they could enroll in the fall and still be eligible. This amendment would correct that inequity as well.

Let me just repeat something which I said in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in May of this year.

During a February 3, 1982, joint hearing of the Subcommittee on Post-secondary Education, and Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education on the effects of the cutback in social security benefits on the student aid programs, Social Security Associate Commissioner Sandy Crank said the following:

"We did not discover it until after it had gone on for some time . . . Unfortunately, through an error, the old stock of pamphlets were not destroyed . . . and unfortunately some of the old stock was used in notices of children after August 1981. We have no way of identifying which children received the incorrect pamphlet."

Many, many parents and students have testified before committees on this Hill that the issue here has been examined at great length in the hearing process. I am not trying to get a vote on the floor today on something which is new. This is ground which has been plowed at great length and many organizations in this country have become involved in the cause to restore this benefit for this additional year. These organizations are the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, the American Council on Education, the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities; the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges, the American Association of Admissions Officers and Collegiate Registrars, the Council of Independent Colleges, the Jesuit Colleges of America, the National Association for Equal Opportunity in Higher Education, the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, and the Committee of Urban Program Universities.

The amendment which I hope to be able to offer at some point and have voted on prior to our leaving in August would preserve for 1 year most of the social security student benefits for children of deceased and disabled workers and children of soldiers killed in Vietnam. The cost of this partial and temporary restoration of this program would be offset by crediting to the social security trust fund instead of to the general fund uncashed social security checks.

The amendment would extend the date by which this year's college-bound children must matriculate in order to continue receiving benefits.

The amendment is intended to redress the double injustice done to thousands of recipients whose college education plans may be thwarted because they were either misinformed or not informed at all by the Social Security Administration of the changes made in the 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act until only months prior to their graduation this spring—certainly not sufficient time to allow for these young people to investigate and apply for alternative resources.

The changes enacted last year eliminated social security student benefits for new beneficiaries not enrolled in a college or other post-secondary educational institution by May 1982. My amendment sets the enrollment deadline back from May to October 1982, allowing this year's high school seniors and hopefully, this year's fall college entrants to complete their education with the aid of social security benefits they had every expectation they would continue to receive. The program would phase out as scheduled, 1985—no benefits would be paid during this year's freshman or senior year in college. The student would enter his or her freshman year at a 25 percent reduction in benefits, as scheduled under present law for persons already covered. Additionally, there would be no benefit payments during the summer months—May through August—as under current law.

Mr. President, this amendment is somewhat different from legislation I introduced earlier this year. My original legislation, S. 2512, cosponsored by 23 Members in this body, would have allowed the students about whom I speak to receive benefits during their full 4 years in college by delaying the 25 percent reduction in benefits for 1 year, thereby extending the phaseout to 1986 rather than the scheduled 1985. Because it did that and because it would have delayed the scheduled 25 percent reduction for 1 year for all students, that bill cost almost four times what this amendment will cost. The cost of this scaled-down amendment is totally offset by crediting to the social security trust fund what belongs to that trust fund, uncashed social security checks.

It is estimated that 250,000 to 300,000 high school graduated seniors would benefit from this amendment. As many as 75,000 to 100,000 of these young people received erroneous information relative to their eligibility for future benefits. Thousands of incorrect brochures went out from the social security Kansas City and Birmingham regional offices—two out of six centers nationwide—from August 1981 to January 1982. Social security "mistakenly" sent out its old brochures, containing previous law guidelines, which clearly stated beneficiaries would continue to be eligible for benefits upon attending college.

Mr. President, these young men and women made their educational plans based on the Social Security Administration's reassurance that promised benefits would continue to be available to them.

Not only did high school seniors receive erroneous information by mail—erroneous information was also given out by phone when parents and students called their local social security offices with questions about the program.

It is only fair that this Government accept the responsibility of its own errors and its own actions. These young people should not have their future educational plans suddenly disrupted, if not destroyed, through no fault of their own.

Most of the young people affected are from marginal income families. In 1981, over 60 percent were survivors of deceased workers and soldiers. A sizable number were from families where both parents are deceased. Seventy-one percent of the beneficiaries were from families with incomes of under $15,000; 53 percent from families with incomes under $8,000.

Mr. President, about 45,000 of these young people are orphans of Vietnam soldiers, our soldiers in Vietnam who never came back, who were promised that if they went to Vietnam and died that their children would receive the social security benefits through college.

Eleven thousand three hundred young people, by the way, in my own depressed State of Michigan are depending on these promised benefits to aid them through college.

Mr. President, I want to share with my colleagues one more paragraph from the remarks of Mrs. Alice James, the widowed parent of four children affected by the changes in the social security student benefit program. Her remarks were made on February 3 of this year before the Post-Secondary Education Subcommittee in the House:

> Congress has robbed these children of the educational opportunities their parents earned for them. It has also robbed them of faith in their government. I beg of you—restore their funding; restore their faith in their country.

As I indicated, Mr. President, the cost of this amendment, over the 3-year period affected, is $245 million. The second part of this amendment addresses the question of how to pay for the benefit by addressing the issue of the uncashed social security benefit checks. This amendment would offset the cost of this partial restoration of the program immediately, 1983 fiscal year, in the following way:

Hundreds of millions of unnegotiated social security checks remain in the general fund rather than being recredited to the social security trust funds. According to the Social Security Administration the accumulated total of uncashed benefits is now up to an estimated $255 million. Each year over $20 million is added. These funds can offset the 3-year cost of partially restoring the student benefit for this year's high school graduated seniors. They also will make a contribution toward preserving the solvency of the social security system.

For the past several years, the Social Security Administration has been negotiating with the Treasury Department to arrange for a change in the administrative procedure used in handling these outstanding checks, but to no avail. In response to this need for a legislative remedy, Senator HOLLINGS and I introduced this legislation on March 1 of this year. To date, the bill, S. 2150, has been cosponsored by Senators CHILES, CRANSTON, DIXON, DODD, HATFIELD, HAWKINS, HEFLIN, HOLLINGS, HUMPHREY, INOUYE, MATSUNAGA, MELCHER, and ZORINSKY.

The legislation provides procedures for crediting the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund and the Federal disability insurance trust fund with the amounts of social security checks which have not been negotiated within 12 months. The legislation also applies retroactively, transferring the $255 million accumulation to date of unnegotiated checks to the social security trust funds.

Let me explain how the uncashed benefit checks have accumulated. When payment is made to a social security beneficiary a voucher is submitted by the Social Security Administration to the Treasury Department for the amount of the benefit. This amount is then withdrawn from the social security trust fund and the payment is sent to the beneficiary. For any number of reasons some benefit checks may not be cashed. In many instances the checks are lost, stolen, burned, or saved for later use. In some cases the beneficiary of the check is deceased. Under present procedure, regardless of why the check is not cashed, the money has technically been spent by Social Security. The Treasury Department holds these funds until the checks are cashed. If the check is never negotiated, this money is added to the Treasury's general fund. The social security trust funds not only lose the initial amount, but also the interest obtainable by proper investment of the trust funds.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to my colleague from Arkansas for purposes of debate only without losing my right to the floor and without this being counted as an interruption of my speech for the purposes of the two-speech rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I want to refer to a very personal experience I had when I was Governor. I think the distinguished floor manager on the majority side, Senator HATFIELD, as a former Governor, can relate to this.

I remember one night about 10 o'clock in the evening, a very stormy night, the president of Texas International—at that time it was called Trans-Texas—called me at the Governor's mansion and told me he thought that Texas International had a plane down in southwest Arkansas. The plane had apparently been lost in a storm and crashed into a mountain in the Ouachitas. I immediately called the National Guard and told them I wanted to send out helicopter search teams at the very earliest possible time. They checked the weather between Little Rock and Texarkana, which was the vicinity of the crash and said they did not think that helicopters could make it because of fog. I said, "Well, at the earliest possible moment that you think the weather will permit you to go, I want you to go. The relatives of all the people on that plane are not going to have a moment's rest until we find the plane."

So about 3 o'clock in the morning they decided that the weather was good enough to allow the plane to go, and two helicopters took off with three men on board each helicopter so they would arrive at the break of dawn to start looking for the plane. Unhappily, and tragically, about halfway to Texarkana, they ran into fog. It was later determined that one of the pilots apparently got vertigo in the fog, and one of the helicopters crashed killing all three crewmen.

That may seem like a strange story in the context of this debate, but I can tell you that it was the most traumatic thing that happened to me while I was Governor. I felt a great sense of responsibility for those three crewmen and certainly for their families. Two of the men who died left widows and children. I tried to keep up with their families.

About 1 year and 3 months ago, one of the wives called me and said, "Senator Bumpers, you got a bill passed when you were Governor so that my children could go to any State-supported school tuition free." I said, "Yes, I remember that."

She said, "Well, I just saw in the paper that the President is suggesting that they take student benefits away from children." She said, "I have one in school right now that could not be there if it were not for the social security he is drawing on his father, and I have another one who will start to school in the fall of 1982."

I said, "Well, do not worry about it. This President, I know, wants to cut the budget; he wants to do a lot of things, but I do not think he would ever suggest that students who are in school on social security, or those who are about to enter, would ever be deprived of those social security benefits."

Well, the rest is history. The President made such a proposal and it passed. This is just one isolated case of the terrible burden and the terrible inequity that has been imposed on people who thought they had a sacred contract with the U.S. Government.

I am not going to defend against the argument that social security was never intended to send children to college. I agree that it was not. It was never intended to be the sole source of income for retirees either. It was always considered a supplemental benefit for old age.

Mr. President, you are listening to a Senator who would not be here right now if it had not been for the GI bill of rights. I went to law school in one of the best schools in the country. I guess my father would have stolen to see that his children received a good education. I know he could not have sent his two sons to expensive schools if it had not been for the GI bill of rights.

To follow that up, while I was in law school, my father, who had paid the maximum on social security since the program began, was killed in a car wreck, instantly. And his widow, my mother, could not have drawn because she was killed in the same car wreck. My father had paid maximum social security all of his life and his family drew not one penny.

I think in a case like that you might say the family should have at least gotten something back for the 20 years he paid social security. I think we received a $200 death benefit to help bury them. That was all.

Mr. President, one of the things I learned at my father's feet was that some people are very fortunate. They have good minds, they have good bodies, they are brought up in good families, they have plenty of income, they have the best of everything, and they have the choice of their schools. Unfortunately, that is not the case with about 90 percent of the people in this country.

Look at the statistics. Eighty percent of the children going to school on social security come from families with incomes of less than $15,000 a year.

This is not exactly a great, big grab by the wealthy. This program is designed to help people get an education.

Mr. President, I do not want to become absolutely maudlin about this, but, after all, what the Senator from Michigan is proposing is not all that draconian. First of all, he is taking care of the objection that his amendment is a budget buster. It is not, and he has told the Senate how it can be funded.

No. 2, he said, correctly, that if we are going to cut people off social security who want to go to college, for Pete's sake, give them a little notice, and do not try the underhanded tactic of saying, "If you're not enrolled in a college by May of 1982, you're out."

Is that fair? Was that really an open, honest, and above board proposal by this administration, to say, "If you are not entered by May, you are out"?

Kids do not enroll in college in May. Kids enroll in college in August and September.

I met with all the State-supported school presidents in my office one day, and the next day I met with all the presidents of the private colleges in Arkansas. They all said, "We are going across this State, combing it as best we can, to get the word out that these people are going to have to make a very early decision." I can tell you that they were upset about what we did last year with this program.

This President, Ronald Reagan, has had one of the greatest opportunities to do some things that should be done in this country, and he has done some of them. He has proposed a lot of budgetary cuts that were perfectly legitimate. He has tried to control spending in a lot of areas, and he is trying to cut down on the unnecessary regulation of business and average citizens. But when he talks about cutting back on student financial aid, to deprive youngsters of a college education—youngsters who have no chance otherwise—it betrays the very finest instincts of the people of this country.

How are we going to compete against Germany and Japan technologically if we do not educate our youngsters? Did you see the article in the newspaper a couple of days ago which stated that Harvard has always prided itself on the fact that about 25 percent of the freshman class come from families which have never had anybody attend college before?

I had the No. 1 student at Harvard intern in my office this summer, a youngster from Nashville, Ark.—one of the finest youngsters I have ever known. He just happened to be a brilliant lad who received a fine scholarship. I do not know whether his folks could have sent him to Harvard without financial help, but he finished No. 1 in his class last spring.

We talked about this, and he talked about what a great cross-section of students are there. But Harvard announced the other day that the figure of 25 percent in the freshman class who have been coming from families which have never had a soul go to college is now down to 15 percent or 16 percent. Do you know what that translates into? That translates into more and more of Harvard's students are coming from the affluent sections because the others simply cannot afford to go there, no matter how deserving they are. Harvard is upset about it, and rightly they should be.

Mr. President, as I said, I know that I have a tendency to be a populist when it comes to health and education; and if I were not a product of the GI bill and if my father had not taught me, and taught all three of his children, that we had good minds and good bodies and therefore owed society more, I would not be standing here.

I am always amazed, incidentally, to find a lot of people who grew up poor and probably made it more by luck, or by having sensible parents, or maybe just some kind of economic luck, always saying, "Why can't everybody pull themselves up by their bootstraps, like I did?"

Here is a minimal proposal to keep faith with about 250,000 youngsters who thought they were going to go to school this fall because their parents, one or more, are dead, and they have no other source of income. The fathers of some of them were killed in Vietnam, and their fathers thought they had a contract with the Government that if anything happened to them in Vietnam, their children would be educated.

So unless this amendment by Senator LEVIN passes, we are saying, "No. We have changed the rules in the middle of the game."

I applaud the tenacity and the dedication of the Senator from Michigan. He has never deviated once since he started on this crusade to try to take care of these youngsters this fall. I have always said that if I had CARL LEVIN's tenacity, I would run for king. I applaud him, and we all ought to, and I support him strongly in this effort to bring up this amendment.

Mr. President, I yield back to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arkansas, not just for the eloquence of his defense of this amendment but also for his personal comments. I want him to know that I will vote for him for king, anytime he wants to run.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas reminded us that what is involved here is not just correction of the underlying injustice of what we are doing to 250,000 students this fall, but also, we are talking about correcting the mistake our Government made in notifying them, when they were seniors in high school, about what their rights were. It was a double mistake, I hope an unusual mistake, because I hope Government does not often do what the Social Security Administration did this spring.

Representative PEYSER, the sponsor of one of the bills in the House to correct this problem, said the following about this problem in one of the hearings in the House:

I think that the actions that we have seen, Mr. Chairman, and have been witnessing for the past few months by the Social Security Administration, can justifiably be described as deception by omission by not informing the students throughout the country that their education benefits will be lost unless they are enrolling and attending college by May of 1982. The Social Security Administration, in my opinion, is cheating nearly 200,000 eligible students out of their potential rights.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman representing the Social Security Administration used the words "making extraordinary efforts to get the public the information." Well, I have gotten some copies of what those extraordinary efforts were in dealing with, for instance, the newspapers. This is a copy of what was sent out by the Social Security Administration on this subject matter and what it says, "As a result of legislation enacted in mid-1981, social security student benefits will be phased out for those attending postsecondary schools. When student benefits first began in 1965 the rationale was that young people 18 to 22 who were full-time students were as much dependent on their parents for support as children under 18. However, benefits were not related to any education costs involved or to school performance." That was the end of the release dealing with changes on social security that went out in December of 1981.

We have another one that deals with changes, and they say "There are changes in the social security benefits under the student programs. If you have any questions, contact your regional office." That was another news release that went out.

Representative PEYSER went on to say the following at this hearing, on this disastrous, precipitate, erroneous, false cutoff of social security benefits for a quarter of a million of our students, our children:

It seems to me that these news releases which are copies from the public service announcements of the Social Security Administration certainly do nothing that would tell the students we are talking about what the story is. It has reached such a point, and for once I am pleased—not for once—I am pleased with my colleagues for quick action on this. Many Members of Congress have been reaching out in their districts trying to get this message out. I took the liberty a month and a half ago of mailing out to nearly 6,000 guidance teachers in high schools all over the country exactly what the situation was. We have received countless calls and letters from people, and I selected one or two.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am grateful to the Senator for letting me interrupt.

I inform the Senator that I just received word that there will be an objection raised to adopting the amendments en bloc which will require, therefore, that we act on each amendment separately. That means about 35 amendments will have to be acted on separately.

The Senator from Michigan will, of course, have an opportunity to retain his posture on this bill on any one of these amendments in terms of denying the Senate to move on to completion of this, and I understand the Senator's tactic and he is certainly within his rights. I know he feels very deeply about this subject. I do in no way want to be critical but rather merely perhaps to inform the Senator that I wish very much, if there is any possibility at all to move on these amendments, to get the conference report adopted in order that we can move on these amendments and to make certain that in no way we prevent the Senator or in any way foreclose the Senator from carrying on his effort here in the strategy that he has employed.

There are two amendments, one each from the Senators from Alaska and New Mexico, 115 and 150, which are not included in the motion to adopt the amendments en bloc but that no longer really means a great deal because of the fact we cannot adopt them en bloc.

I know the Senator from Michigan realizes, too, that we have to complete this supplemental appropriation before the recess commences. I have just also spoken to the majority leader, and the majority leader indicated to me that if we cannot finish this bill today, we will have to work until tomorrow to finish it.

So with those various forces at play here, I pose a question again to the Senator that has been posed a short while ago by the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE). Is the Senator willing at least to move ahead on the housekeeping activity that relates to this bill and not substantive matters in any way and at the same time not adopting all the amendments but rather adopt the major number that we can under the one-by-one routine and thereby preserving his same rights that exist now to delay final action on the bill until he has received some satisfactory resolution to his cause?

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my friend from Oregon. I wish to take that request under advisement. We are checking out a couple of technical aspects on it. I may be able to agree to that but I wish to take it under advisement at this point.

Mr. HATFIELD. Then I shall make a unanimous-consent request. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the Senator from Michigan, if he is willing, may yield the floor without losing his right to the floor for the purpose of some statements only by the chairmen of the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee in support of this bill.

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUDMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I yield for that purpose under this situation now to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank both the distinguished chairman of the committee and also my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference agreement on H.R. 6863 and urge my colleagues to expeditiously approve it so that it can be submitted to the President for his signature.

For the agencies funded under the provisions of chapter II of this bill, the President requested $171,384,000 in program increases. As chairman of the Subcommittee on State, Justice, Commerce, the Judiciary and Related Agencies, I am pleased to report that the conference agreement provides $149,951,000 in new budget authority and $6,250,000 by transfer. In addition, the conference report rescinds $2,000,000 in foreign currency gain excess to the program requirements of the Board for International Broadcasting. Thus, Mr. President, the recommendation of the conference for chapter II is $17,103,000 less than the program supplemental submitted to the Congress. Yet, it contains funds necessary to support the on-going activities of a number of Departments and agencies.

For the Department of Justice, this agreement provides $71,711,000 and includes funds to finance the activities of the South Florida Anticrime Task Force comprised of U.S. attorneys, marshals, the FBI, and DEA agents. In addition, the conference agreement contains $17,000,000 for the construction of one facility for the detention of aliens and provides $22,000,000 critically necessary for construction of a new Federal prison.

For the Department of State, the conference report provides $60,587,000 including $40,000,000 requested by the President to provide additional security for the protection of our diplomatic personnel abroad. Also included in this report is $1,600,000 for preparation and presentation of the U.S. claim in the Gulf of Maine boundary dispute before the International Court of Justice. The Gulf of Maine dispute concerns a 12,000 square mile area off New England which contains mineral and living resources of immense value. The preservation of the rights of the United States, which have long been exercised in this area, is of great importance to New England and to the rest of the country. While the conferees expressed concern regarding numerous irregularities in the presentation of the budget justification for this request, it is clear that there is every expectation that the case presented by the United States will not be inferior to the Canadian Government's presentation of its case.

For the Department of Commerce, the conference recommends $15,663,000 in new budget authority and $3,000,000 by transfer to fund the first year of New York's coastal zone management program. In addition, $10,000,000 is provided for U.S. participation in the World Exposition to be held in New Orleans in 1984. These funds are contingent upon enactment of an authorization.

Mr. President, I would like to say a few words about the conference agreement as a whole. The Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) who is chairman of the Appropriations Committee should be congratulated for his leadership on this legislation. This is not a budget busting bill. The President submitted supplemental requests totaling $16.1 billion. This bill provides $14.2 billion. Thus, we are well within the budget request.

However, the programmatic priorities of the budget have been rearranged. The Defense Department did not get all it wanted in this supplemental. Congress has exercised its discretion and determined that other programs—programs directly benefiting the aged, the handicapped, the disadvantaged, and students are more deserving.

Let us review the list. We are $1.9 billion under the budget request. We have reduced the amount available for Defense programs and we have reduced military aid programs. We have added $210 million for older Americans; $148 million for compensatory education for the disadvantaged; $217 million for student financial assistance; and $26.5 million for education for the handicapped.

We have exercised our prerogatives to assure that Congress has an opportunity to address regulations governing the education of the handicapped and we have expressed ourselves with respect to the necessary level of resources to carry out energy conservation programs. We have language in the bill regarding the expenditure of funds for subsidized housing programs.

The issue at hand is not whether this bill is over the budget. The issue is over the details of the budget and whether those details are acceptable to the President.

The issue is whether we accept the budget as presented by the President or whether the Congress establishes different priorities.

In the opinion of this Senator, the conference agreement before the Senate today has set our priorities straight. It is a good conference agreement. It is one we should adopt and send to the White House.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to thank the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER). He is immeasurably valuable to our committee. He is the chairman of the Subcommittee on State, Justice and Commerce, and he carries a major load in our committee, and I appreciate his statement of support.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I rise today in support of H.R. 6863, the 1982 Supplemental Appropriations Act. As chairman of the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee, I can say without hesitation that this bill represents tremendous fiscal restraint and responsibility on the part of the Congress, while at the same time providing necessary funds for numerous programs desirable to most legislators and, indeed, desirable to most Americans.

Specifically with respect to the Interior and Related Agencies chapter of the bill, we have included funds for firefighting costs in our national forests and on other public lands, we have provided money to pay citizens for lands condemned by the Government, and have finally made full payment to the people of Bikini on whose island we detonated nuclear weapons in the late 1950's.

Moreover, we have provided money to reclaim 45 high priority strip mine areas throughout the country, have included funds for necessary sanitation facilities in thousands of Indian homes, have taken steps to reduce duplication and waste in the Nation's coal mining research and development activities, and have made an effort to prevent further deterioration of several of this country's necessary energy programs.

Mr. President, while this bill—like every other—represents a compromise between the House and the Senate, I firmly believe it is a fair and balanced compromise. Perhaps, more important, I do not believe this measure can be considered a budget buster in any sense of the imagination. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask of my colleagues to join me and overwhelmingly approve the conference report on this 1982 Supplemental Appropriations Act.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to report that the District of Columbia's chapter that emerged from the conference is identical to the Senate version of H.R. 6863. This agreement provided for a net $60.3 million in new budget authority in District of Columbia funds. This is made up of $63.9 million in added authority for the operations of the city government and $10.6 million in capital project costs and $774,000 for costs associated with the new convention center. These increases are partially offset by the rescission of nearly $15 million in authority previously appropriated.

One key point should be made. This chapter contains no increased Federal funds to the District, and in fact rescinds the city's authority to spend some Federal funds which will no longer be available to them. This request is offset by additional local revenue being realized. There trends began nearly a year ago and results primarily from increased collection techniques.

Mr. President, these funds are critical to the District's ability to provide for the public safety and health. A third of this increase is needed as the local share of increased medicaid costs. We have also increased the funds available to the police chief to fight crime, to add 90 more correctional officers in order to increase security at the city's central prison facility, and authority for the courts to provide a speedier trial and reduce its staggering felony case backlog.

This chapter provides additional resources to address circumstances that could not have been foreseen at the beginning of the fiscal year. These allowances are prudent and necessary and I urge Senators to adopt them.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 6863, the fiscal 1982 supplemental appropriations bill. This bill remains well within the budget ceilings of the Revised Second Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1982.

Mr. President, this conference agreement continues the fiscal restraint that was evident in the bill as it passed the Senate. I want to offer my congratulations to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator HATFIELD, and to all the other conferees on this bill for a job well done.

H.R. 6863, as reported by the committee of conference, provides $9.2 billion in budget authority and $7.5 billion in outlays in fiscal year 1982 for supplemental appropriations. If this conference report is enacted, Federal spending will still be below the fiscal year 1982 budget ceilings by $8.1 billion in budget authority and $1.1 billion in outlays.

H.R. 6863 provides $6.1 billion in budget authority and $5.9 billion in outlays for costs associated with the October 1981 pay raise for Federal employees. That is by far the largest item in this bill. The remainder provides supplemental appropriations for individual programs, including economic assistance funds for the President's Caribbean Basin Initiative, employment, education, and transportation items.

The conference report on H.R. 6863 is $1.5 billion in budget authority and $1.4 billion in outlays below the President's request. The major reason for this is that the conference agreement is $1.8 billion in budget authority and $1 billion in outlays below the President's request for defense programs.

Mr. President, I know that some have raised questions about the balance between defense and nondefense programs in this bill. I am sure that each of us has his own opinion about the priorities in this bill. I would remind everyone, however, that under the congressional budget process, the determination of these priorities within the overall budget totals is the responsibility of the Appropriations Committees. In this regard, I would once again point out that the Appropriations Committees have brought us a bill that is well within the overall budget totals we have established.

In closing, Mr. President, let me once again congratulate the Appropriations Committee, and particularly the distinguished chairman of the committee, for their work on this bill. I urge adoption of the conference report.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the relationship of the reported bill to the fiscal year 1982 Revised Second Budget Resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Note: Details may not add to totals due to rounding.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, this conference report appropriates absolutely necessary funding for one of our most efficient, most productive programs: the community service employment for older Americans program. This program, authorized under title V of the Older Americans Act, allows some 54,000 low-income senior citizens to work part time in their communities.

Mr. President, those who oversee title V employees throughout my State of Connecticut have told me that such employees are the hardest working, most dedicated people they have ever met. Title V employees have gone a long way toward improving the educational, health, welfare, and social services in communities across the Nation. It is imperative that we continue to provide full funding for this outstanding program.

I must express my deep concern, however, over a provision in this conference report which changes the formula for allocating title V funds. The Senate voted to appropriate the supplemental funds for title V according to the formula mandated by the Older Americans Act reauthorization of 1981, giving 76 percent to national contractors and 24 percent to State programs. The House version of H.R. 6863, however, changed that statutory formula, allocating 80 percent of the funds to national contractors and only 20 percent to State programs. A compromise was reached in conference, giving 78 percent to national contractors and 22 percent to State programs.

I commend my colleagues in the Senate who refused to recede to the House on this point during conference. Nevertheless, I view the compromise reached as a dangerous precedent, one which may undermine the State programs.

Mr. President, there is no reason to change the existing statutory formula for distributing title V funds. The State-administered programs are efficient and effective, as recognized during the debate on the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act last year. Moreover, State programs provide a wide geographic distribution of title V jobs, reaching senior citizens in areas not served by the national contractors.

Thus, although I support wholeheartedly the appropriation in this conference report for title V, I would have far preferred to see such funds distributed according to the statutorily mandated formula.

● Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I want to emphasize the importance of the agriculture chapter of this supplemental appropriations bill, and to add my support for passage of the conference report.

The major item in the agriculture chapter is a badly needed increase of $5 billion in the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC). This increase will permit the CCC to continue funding the price support and commodity purchase programs authorized by law—programs that are very important to our farmers. Without this additional authority, CCC may be unable to meet its obligations. Our farm economy is unable to withstand any breakdown in the administration of farm programs, so I urge my colleagues to vote for the conference report.●

● Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee conferees on H.R. 6863 have agreed upon a final product which deserves the support of Members of the Senate, and deserves the signature of the President. Resuming its traditional role of appropriating funds under the level requested by the President, the committee's final product is nearly $2 billion under the President's request. The President requested $11.056 billion in supplemental funds for fiscal year 1982, most of which is for increased pay costs in the Department of Defense. The conferees have been able to reduce this request to $9.177 billion, a savings of over 15 percent. In addition, we should not overlook the conference committee's performance regarding rescissions of fiscal year 1982 budget authority. Whereas the President recommended $287 million in rescissions, the conferees delivered slightly over $400 million, an increase in savings of nearly 40 percent over the President's proposals.

Mr. President, it is my privilege to head the Appropriations Subcommittee on the legislative branch. I want to be sure my colleagues are aware of the reductions made by our subcommittee in this bill. The President's budget included $35,629,000 in program supplementals for the legislative branch. The conferees, anxious to stress that the legislative branch is making the same sacrifices it is calling upon others to make, cut that request to only $8,597,325, a mere 24 percent of the requested amount. We were also able to make savings in pay supplementals. In title II of H.R. 6863, $35,233,000 is provided for the legislative branch, rather than the full request of $40,256,000. The total appropriated for the legislative branch in this bill is just 58 percent of the President's budget.

Mr. President, returning to the entire bill, how many times in the past year have we been able to say that we recommend appropriations of only 83 percent of the President's request? I hope the committee's performance on this bill is a harbinger of the committee's action on fiscal year 1983 appropriation bills. I would call to the attention of the Senate that the only fiscal year 1983 bill upon which committee action has been completed, for HUD and independent agencies, is nearly $9 billion under that subcommittee's allocation. So I think we are making progress in holding down spending. This is a good bill, and I urge my colleagues to support it, and the President to sign it.●

● Mr. SYMMS. During consideration of H.R. 6863 on the House floor, a colloquy took place between the distinguished chairmen of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee and the House Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee regarding a letter the Senator from North Dakota had received from the Federal Highway Administration on the subject of geometric design standards for 3R work. I wonder if the Senator from North Dakota, Senator ANDREWS, is familiar with that colloquy and the letter?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes, I am familiar with the letter and the discussion in the other body. I am in agreement with the conclusion reached in that discussion. To be specific it reiterates Congress' intent that the 3R program continue and that reimbursements for projects authorized after July 12, 1982, be made.

Mr. SYMMS. So it is the understanding of the chairman of the Senate Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee that rehabilitation work could continue to be carried out without disruption and delay using the standards and procedures in effect and being utilized by the States immediately prior to July 12, 1982?

Mr. ANDREWS. That is correct.

Mr. SYMMS. Is it also the understanding of the distinguished Senator that the limitation on the use of funds applies only to the Federal Highway Administration's rule "Design standards for highways, resurfacing, restoration, and rehabilitation of streets and highways other than freeways," and that this limitation is in force only until September 30, 1982?

Mr. ANDREWS. The distinguished chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee is correct.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Senate Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee for this clarification. This has been a difficult issue and I believe that it must be resolved so that the critical 3R program is not put in jeopardy. I believe the States have been moving forward with this program as quickly as they can with the limited funds available to them.●

SENIOR COMMUNITY SERVICES EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the conference report on H.R. 6863, the fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriations bill, includes $210.6 million for the senior community services employment program authorized under title V of the Older Americans Act. This funding is essential to continued operation of the program beyond September 30 without disruption.

The Senate has repeatedly affirmed its overwhelming support for title V. Last year, it passed unanimously a 3 year reauthorization of the program, as part of the Older Americans Act amendments of 1981.

On July 1 of this year, the Senate passed by a vote of 89 to 6 a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that no action be taken to terminate or weaken this program for older workers. The House of Representatives, on July 20, adopted a similar resolution of support for the title V program, by an overwhelming vote of 407 to 4.

It is clear that both the Senate and the House, Democrats and Republicans alike, recognize that failure to continue categorical funding for title V will seriously jeopardize a program which has proven effective in providing jobs and services to senior citizens and to communities across the Nation.

Testimony before Congress earlier this year revealed that a title V program in Alabama, at a cost of approximately $160,000, has saved the State roughly $1.35 million annually by enabling frail elderly persons to remain in their own homes. A title V worker in Illinois opened a communal meal center in an underutilized Federal building, and is now serving 25 meals per week to senior citizens. Leaders of community after community, have testified that title V program participants make important contributions to the quality of life in their towns and cities.

In strict dollar terms, studies show that title V jobs return to the taxpayers $1.15 for every dollar spent on the program; that SSI and food stamp costs were reduced an average of $24 a month whenever a new person joined the title V program; and that FICA contributions of title V participants alone amount to $1,575,639 per year. By any measure, the program is a valuable investment in communities and people.

In spite of the overwhelming evidence of this program's worth, the Reagan administration requested zero funding for title V for fiscal year 1983. The administration opposed the inclusion in the urgent supplemental appropriations bills of the $210.6 million to keep title V going, twice vetoing the bill. And now, in relation to the conference report on the regular supplemental which is before us, Budget Director Stockman has written to the Appropriations Committee complaining of the "unwarranted" increases in domestic spending, specifically citing the community service employment program for older Americans.

Mr. President, as I have said, Congress has repeatedly rejected the administration's efforts to terminate the title V programs. Through reauthorization legislation, resolutions of intent, and most significantly, through the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1983, which provides for continued funding at the 1982 level, Congress has affirmed congressional support for the future employment of the 54,200 senior citizens who work in title V programs. However, if the program is to continue without disruption this year, the funds in the supplemental bill before us must be approved to send a real signal to the administration of our determination to keep the title V program alive and well at present operating levels.

TITLE V OF THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I support H.R. 6863; however, I feel compelled to address the provision in the bill which appropriates $210.572 million for title V of the Older Americans Act. I fully support these additional funds which will permit this vital program to be operated on a forward-funded basis as required by the authorizing legislation. Failure to allocate these funds might well cause programs throughout the Nation to cease operations until which time the money becomes available.

As my colleagues in the Senate know, title V funds provide employment opportunities to over 54,000 older Americans. These hard-working citizens are employed in a variety of jobs which permit the delivery of important community services. The program has received an overwhelming endorsement by the Congress. Last year, the Older Americans Act was reauthorized for another 3 years. In addition, this body, by a vote of 89 to 6, reaffirmed its strong support for title V.

Under the formula for allocating funds for title V as set forth in the authorizing legislation, 76 percent of the appropriated moneys are directed toward national contractors and 24 percent go to State offices for the aging. Although the report which accompanies the reauthorization explicitly states that "efforts to distort this formula through other legislative vehicles clearly violate the letter and spirit of this Act," efforts have been made in the House to change the funding split to 80 percent for national contractors and 20 percent for State offices for the aging. This change in the funding allocation would have caused over 2,000 older Americans to lose their jobs.

Despite efforts by Representative BIAGGI and others in the House to return to the authorized funding splits, the House came to conference on the supplemental appropriations bill with a funding allocation which clearly contravenes law. In conference, I fought to have the House recede to the Senate position which followed the authorizing legislation. The merits are clearly on our side. As I have already indicated, the report language on the authorizing legislation states that any changes in the funding splits would be inappropriate. Moreover, several national contractors have written to Senator SCHMITT, chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies Appropriations that they feel honorbound to accept the funding formula which they helped draft and which was agreed upon in the authorizing legislation.

In the spirit of compromise and in an effort not to stall passage of the supplemental appropriations conference report which contains other important items such as title I funds for the educationally disadvantaged and interstate transfer-highway funds, I agreed to a 78–22 split between national contractors and State offices for the aging. I thank my colleagues from New York, Representatives KEMP and ADDABBO, for their assistance in the conference on this matter. I support the conference report, but I did want to indicate my opposition to attempts to change that formula set forth in the authorizing legislation.●

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, I stand and join with my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee to endorse the conference agreement to H.R. 6863, the supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1982.

Mr. President, the military construction chapter in the supplemental, which was considered by the subcommittee I chair, appropriates $45 million for various military facilities' projects. The $45 million was the same amount recommended by the House, and represents a decrease from the President's request of $153.7 million. As in the past, the Military Construction Subcommittee recommends funding in a supplemental only for those items of an urgent or unusual nature. The decrease from the budget request was made because authorization was lacking on some projects, but mainly because the money just was not necessary at this time. It is interesting to note that throughout the action in committee and on the Senate floor there was not even one question concerning the reduction in military construction funding. This certainly indicates to me the strong support of my colleagues.

Mr. President, the military construction chapter of this bill is minor in total dollars and was not even a part of the conference. However, the bill as a whole is back before us today, and I understand that within the administration there is discussion of a Presidential veto.

Let me say just a few words on the total bill at this point—

The bill is nearly $2 billion under the President's request, and granted, a sizable decrease was made in the defense-related chapters of the bill.

However, it is my understanding that the so-called, "must pay," defense items have been taken care of.

Mr. President, I, for one, have certainly gone on record for a strong national defense as has the distinguished Senator from Alaska, Mr. STEVENS, who chairs the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. But, in considering both the defense and military construction chapters of this bill, the Congress has indicated its support for funding only the most urgent or unusual requirements in this supplemental.

As part of our constitutional responsibilities, Mr. President, this body oversees the budget. It is within this responsibility that the Congress makes changes to the President's request.

H.R. 6863, the supplemental for fiscal year 1982 now before us, contains differences from the budget request; and I must say that I do not agree with every aspect of the bill. However, as a whole, I believe that the bill is fair and warrants the careful consideration of all parties involved.

Mr. President, I endorse and support the conference agreement to H.R. 6863, the fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriations bill; and I urge my colleagues to do the same.●

TITLE V, OLDER AMERICANS ACT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased that forward funding in the amount of $210,572,000 for title V of the Older Americans Act is included in the supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1982. The Senate expressed its support of the senior jobs program under title V by passing Senate Resolution 340, a resolution which I introduced, to express the sense of the Senate that no action be taken to terminate or otherwise weaken title V and by twice including forward funding in the urgent supplemental appropriations bills, which were later vetoed by the President.

I want to thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon, Mr. HATFIELD, for his support of forward funding of title V.

THE SENIOR COMMUNITY SERVICES EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM TITLE V OF THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 6863, the supplemental appropriations bill of 1982. In particular, I would like to voice my strong support for the restoration of funding for the senior community services employment program. As chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, I commend the members of the Appropriations Committee, especially Senator HATFIELD and Senator SCHMITT, for their work on behalf of the over 54,000 older persons who are employed under the title V program of the Older Americans Act. The inclusion of $211 million in the supplemental appropriations bill will restore forward funding to this program and guarantee continued employment for these older workers through June 30, 1983.

When the Congress passed the 1981 amendments to the Older Americans Act in December 1981, it made clear its intent that this vital and successful program be continued. Moreover, on July 1, 1982, the Senate again reaffirmed its strong support for title V when it voted 89 to 6 in support of Senate Resolution 340—a sense of the Senate resolution stating that no action be taken to terminate or otherwise weaken the community services employment program under the Older Americans Act.

The success of this program over the years cannot be disputed. Although the present appropriations provide job opportunities for 54,200 elderly persons, many more older men and women are able to participate in the program, because thousands are transitioned into positions with private business concerns or other public service agencies. It is estimated that over 80,000 older workers are served each year under this program.

Mr. President, title V now faces a critical need for funding. If we do not act immediately, 54,200 economically needy older workers, now working in a variety of community service jobs, will find themselves joining the ranks of the unemployed. In my own State of Pennsylvania, over 3,000 workers will be effected. This will not only be a serious blow to the individual, it will also have a damaging impact on the ability of aging programs to continue to serve older Americans. It is estimated that about half of the current enrollees are serving in jobs that promote the general well-being of other older persons funded by the Older Americans Act moneys.

In addition to these damaging facts, it is a serious human problem to neglect the importance of employment opportunities to the economic security, the health, and the personal fulfillment of older Americans. Virtually every survey of older men and women indicates that a majority want to have the opportunity to continue some form of work. One of the major benefits of this program is its demonstration of the significant contribution older workers can and do make to our society.

Mr. President, appropriations of funds for title V continue only to September 30, 1982. I have been informed that many States and national sponsors have already begun to send layoff notices to thousands of older enrollees. I am gravely concerned about the serious emotional consequences that these notices will have to the majority of these workers. To avert further damage and provide reassurance to these enrollees, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the conference report on H.R. 6863.

In conclusion, I would only like to make one additional observation, and that relates to the agreement reached in the conference concerning the formula distribution of the title V moneys. I am concerned that this new formula will shift as many as 1,000 jobs from older Americans employed by State and local agencies on aging to national contractors. This could result in many elderly enrollees losing their jobs due to geographic considerations. I am aware that this change originated in the House, and that the Senate conferees generally opposed it.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank those conferees and especially Senator D'AMATO for their efforts to retain the formula distribution as mandated in the 1981 amendments to the Older Americans Act.

Mr. President, the title V program is truly a working program. It has helped countless of thousands of older persons to stay in the mainstream of community life by making meaningful and productive contributions to our society. I urge my colleagues to continue their strong support for this extraordinarily important program.

TUG FORK FLOOD CONTROL PROJECT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, this supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6863, contains language in chapter V which would require that the administration proceed with flood control work in the Williamson, W. Va., area and certain neighboring locations as specified by Congress in the statement of the managers accompanying the conference report on the fiscal year 1982 Energy and Water Development Appropriation Act. The managers clearly indicated that $7.5 million is to be made available for flood control projects authorized by section 202 which is the basis for the Tug Fork flood control project.

During the spring of 1982, I had serious concerns regarding the Department of the Army's willingness to follow congressional intent with respect to the Tug Fork flood control project. I met with Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, William R. Gianelli, in my office on February 18, 1982, to discuss these concerns; and, I have had a continuing dialog with Mr. Gianelli since that time. In early July, Mr. Gianelli indicated a willingness to proceed with certain flood control measures in the Williamson area beginning with the fiscal year 1984 budget request to Congress. However, the Congress has already directed in the fiscal year 1982 Energy and Water Development Appropriation Act legislative history that this work proceed immediately. In order to insure that the Corps of Engineers proceeds immediately as intended by Congress, I had language included in this supplemental appropriations bill requiring that the congressional intent as expressed last November, be followed explicitly.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am willing to yield back to the Senator from Michigan, and I appreciate the interlude here for these other activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my friend. I will take his request under advisement. We are trying to check out a number of things.

Mr. President, what I am doing at this point is reading from the record of the hearing where Mr. PEYSER, Congressman PEYSER, the sponsor of one of the bills in the House to extend this deadline so that these students can go to college with their promised benefits, is speaking.

Before I continue, just to set the context for this, the amendment we are talking about would continue a promised benefit to the children of workers who are now dead, who were promised if they died before their kids became 18 that the survivor's benefit would continue through college, the social security survivor's benefit.

There are about a quarter of a million this year. About 50,000 are children of soldiers who went to Vietnam and who were told that if they did not come back, if they gave their lives in Vietnam, that their kids would have this social security benefit. The other 200,000 are other Americans, just as equally American, who are also, for the most part, gone. Some of them are still with us and are disabled, but most of them are deceased, and who were told if they contributed to the social security system they could count on that benefit going to their kids through going to college. They could count in their life insurance plans and other plans for living on the social security benefit, and it was not just that we precipitately terminated this last year. That is the underlying problem, the underlying injustice. I am afraid this admendment does not cure that because this only would continue the benefits for 1 year. But what it does cure is a second injustice, and that is about a third of these kids were given false information from the Social Security Administration last year as to whether or not that benefit would be available to them this fall. They were sent information which stated that the social security student benefit program would continue when, in fact, it was terminated as of May of this year. About one out of three of these high school seniors were sent the wrong information.

Congressman PEYSER in this hearing I am quoting from is saying that he did his best to inform as many high school counselors as he could personally of what the correct facts were so at least some students would get the correct information, those who had been given false information, and they could, as many as possible, try to get into college by last May so that they would continue to qualify before the deadline was reached.

He sent out about 6,000 letters to high school counselors around the country and he got some letters back, and that is what he is describing in this hearing record. Congressman PEYSER says:

> Here is a letter from Spring, Texas and it says: "Thank you for taking the time to inform the counselors of the change is social security benefits. As a counselor and as a widow with a young daughter, this information was vital to me."
> That the Social Security Administration, who normally sends out tons of paperwork, has been so quiet on this issue is deplorable. And there are numerous letters of this nature.
> Now all this has reached such a volume, Mr. Chairman, that on the 14th of January—this is just a couple of weeks ago now—the Social Security Administration has sent out a special telegraphic message that I have gotten a copy of to all of its offices. It says, the thrust of it, it goes to the regional offices, special offices, and so forth, the purpose of this is to insure that inquiries regarding the student phaseout provisions of the 1981 Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act are answered correctly. Now, it is very obvious to me that the only reason this was ever sent out, and then they detail the whole thing in great detail, covering it quite correctly as to when the benefits end, is because of the constant complaints that have come from all over the country on people not being notified.
> I talked with Commissioner Svahn the other day and he allowed as how there may be some of these students who were not given the correct information. The process, and I would like to ask if this is correct, normally you notify a student 5 months before he is 18 years of age that he will be eligible for these programs?
> Mr. CRANK. We explain to him at that time what the conditions are for continued receipt of benefits under the status of a student.
> Mr. PEYSER. Do you allow that there were a great many 18-year-olds that were notified that they were eligible for the full benefits after the Act had been changed? Because we have—in other words, that 5-month period, you are still mailing out eligibility, your notices that said they were eligible, and you still had a number of offices, first your Kansas City regional office as late as December was sending out your bulletins saying that these students were eligible, with no statement about your new bulletin that came out that is corrected. And these were sent out from that Kansas City regional office, which covered a very broad area of the country as late as December, letting people believe they were fully eligible. Obviously I guess that is what necessitated this kind of a telegraphic message to all of your units.
> Mr. CRANK. Mr. Peyser, what happened, we did not discover it until after it had gone on for some time, is that we did print up new leaflets explaining the new provisions as enacted in August 1981. Those leaflets were put into stock supplies in social security installations around the country, in particular our large processing centers where most of the notices are released to go to children 17½, use those leaflets to stuff into and to send out to people that age. Unfortunately, through an error, the old stock of pamphlets was not destroyed at the time the new stock of pamphlets was received, and unfortunately some of the old stock was used in notices to children after August 1981. We have corrected that problem. We have destroyed all that old stock.
> Mr. PEYSER. But the question is all of those who received the wrong information, they did not get another mailing, because there is nothing in the system I understand to allow for that up to this point.
> Mr. CRANK. That is correct. We had no way of identifying which children received the incorrect pamphlet.

So we have a double injustice where not only were these benefits precipitately cut off from students whose parents were not able to fight back, were not able to knock on our doors, because most of them are in their graves, but we have the double injustice of where the Social Security Administration to a large number of these students sent out the wrong information and was not able to correct that erroneous information.

We believe that as an absolute maximum this amendment would cost $245 million over the 3-year period. It is more likely it will cost somewhere between $100 million and $150 million, and I will get to that in a moment. But at this point I would like to explain how we have an offset in this amendment to pay for the maximum cost of this benefit, the continuation, 1-year continuation, of this benefit to the Social Security Administration.

As I have indicated, the Social Security Administration sends out hundreds of thousands of checks over a period of years which are not cashed, they are not negotiated, and according to the Social Security Administration the accumulated total of uncashed benefits is now up to an estimated $255 million.

Each year, over $20 million is added. These funds can offset the 3-year cost of partially restoring the student benefit for this year's high school graduated seniors. And if we apply the uncashed checks to the social security fund where it belongs, we also will make a contribution toward preserving the solvency of the social security system in the future.

For the past several years, the Social Security Administration has been trying to work out this arrangement with the Treasury Department, to arrange for a change in the administrative procedures used in handling these uncashed, unnegotiated checks, but to no avail. A legislative remedy appears to be needed. And, as I indicated before, Senator HOLLINGS and I introduced Senate bill 2150 which would correct it and it has been cosponsored on a bipartisan basis by about a dozen Senators to date.

The legislation provides procedures for crediting the Federal old age and survivors insurance trust fund and the Federal disability insurance trust fund with the amounts of social security checks which have not been negotiated within 12 months. The legislation also applies retroactively, transferring the $255 million accumulation to date of unnegotiated checks to the social security trust fund.

Let me explain now just for one moment how the uncashed benefit checks have accumulated. When payment is made to a social security beneficiary, a voucher is submitted by the Social Security Administration to the Treasury Department for the amount of the benefit. This amount is then withdrawn from the social security trust fund and the payment is sent to the beneficiary.

For any number of reasons, some benefit checks may not be cashed. In many instances the checks are lost, stolen, burned, or saved for later use. In some cases, the beneficiary of the check is deceased. Under present procedure, regardless of why the check is not cashed, the money has technically been spent by the Social Security Administration. And the Treasury Department holds these funds until the checks are cashed. If the checks are never negotiated, this money is added to the Treasury's general fund.

The social security trust fund not only loses the initial amount but also the interest obtainable by proper investment of the trust fund.

Mr. President, a moment ago I indicated that the maximum cost of this amendment, if we can get the vote on it, would be, assuming it is adopted, $245 million. And I have just indicated how it would be paid for in terms of the Social Security Administration being credited with about $255 million that have accumulated in uncashed social security checks. And that accumulation is added to at a rate of about $20 million a year. But I also indicated that $245 million is the maximum cost of this amendment, that the actual cost is probably somewhat in the area of half of that amount.

I would like here to quote from another Congressman who was at a hearing on the House side on this issue relative to the cost of restoring this benefit for 1 year.

This is Congressman SOLOMON of New York, who has introduced legislation which would extend the deadline for students to matriculate in college until this fall to accomplish the same purpose as my amendment would accomplish. Congressman SOLOMON said the following:

> Bewildered parents and students all across the United States, from California to Maine, from Florida to Minnesota, have called to voice their support for this legislation and to report that they also learned of these important changes only very recently and through unofficial channels.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUS REGULATORY REFORM ACT OF 1982—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is a conference report which will require a rollcall vote, but, I think, little or no debate.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the Senate temporarily set aside the pending business and proceed now to the consideration of the conference report on H.R. 3663, the Bus Regulatory Reform Act of 1982.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3663) to amend subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, to provide for more effective regulation of motor carriers of passengers, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of today, August 19, 1982.)

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not mean to be the leadoff speaker on this measure. The managers have that right. I will be very brief when I do speak. I will take less than 2 minutes.

At this time I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the conference report has addressed, to the satisfaction of all of the conferees in the House and the Senate, the possibility of small towns losing service. This bill passed overwhelmingly and passed the conference report in 10 minutes in the House last night.

I think I can assure all of those who are concerned that this bill will not leave small towns without any service at all. I do not know of any other possible objections to the bill. Like all others, I come from a State that has hundreds of small towns. The best testimony we had in all of the hearings involving bus deregulation was probably that from Florida, which 1½ years ago, totally deregulated their truck and bus industry.

Florida, as you are aware, has a sunset law on most of their statutes. The sunset ran out on truck and bus regulation and has since never been renewed. In the almost now year and a half they have been operating under deregulation, small towns have been continued to be served. They are not served by 80-passenger buses when they pick up two people in a town. They are served by smaller buses.

I can assure the Senate that there will not be any great dislocation by the passage of this bill.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, earlier this summer the Senate voted to pass legislation to deregulate the bus transportation industry. I voted against that legislation because I thought that it was not in the best interests of the thousands of citizens who live in small rural communities in my State of West Virginia. For many of these people, especially the elderly, bus transportation is the only way to get from one place to another.

Because of the information and advice that I received from the head of the West Virginia Public Service Commission, I opposed bus deregulation by speaking against the bill at the time and voting against it.

I continue to be concerned that this legislation, if passed, would mean that bus transportation service to rural communities would be reduced or eliminated, and the quality of life for those people would be diminished.

I have seen little to no evidence to suggest that my original concerns were unfounded. In fact, a recent Wall Street Journal article has given weight to my convictions on this issue. The article discusses the experience of some States that have already taken the initiative to deregulate the bus industry. It is reported that in Florida, where deregulation was put into effect 2 years ago, "numerous tiny Florida towns * * * have lost bus service entirely through deregulation."

Mr. President, I think many of my colleagues will find this article of interest, especially since we are considering the bus regulatory reform conference report. I ask unanimous consent that the article be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUS DEREGULATION GAINS FAVOR, WORRYING SMALL TOWNS, SMALL OPERATIONS AND ELDERLY

(By Luis Ubinas)

Several Greyhound buses a day once stopped in tiny Bushnell, Fla. Now only one express bus arrives each day, and it doesn't stop in surrounding towns. "We used to take Greyhound to visit old friends and family," says Pauline Graham, a 62-year-old resident, "Now we're stuck here. I guess it really isn't too bad—we have television and the chickens out back. But we feel so much more alone now."

Soon, lots of people in other states may share Mrs. Graham's gripe. Bus deregulation is picking up steam—and so is the controversy surrounding it. Some operators see a chance to make more money than ever while others see a chance to go broke. Many towns fear deregulation will deprive them of any bus service at all.

"We're going to see a boom for the big companies—the ones with the money—but the little old lady in Humboldt, S.D., isn't going to be able to get on a bus," says Sen. Larry Pressler of South Dakota.

CAUGHT IN THE MIDDLE

Intrastate bus deregulation went into effect in Arizona on July 1. It becomes effective in Ohio August 30 and in Wisconsin this fall. Both houses of Congress recently passed bills deregulating interstate bus service nationwide. Differences between the two bills could be resolved this month.

Like airline deregulation earlier, bus deregulation gives operators far greater freedom to start serving new markets, dump old routes that don't pay and revise fares. Advocates say increased competion could bring lower fares and improved fares and improved service, at least on the heavily traveled routes.

Big operators with lots of capital are adding such routes. Tiny cut-rate operators with low overhead costs are springing up by the dozen. But established small companies say they are caught in the middle because their overhead costs are high and they don't have the capital to start more service between big cities.

FLORIDA'S EXPERIENCE

"Under deregulation, small operators don't stand a chance." says Bernard Pollack, executive vice president of Sun Valley Bus Lines, Phoneix, Ariz. Many worried operators in Arizona and elsewhere look to what happened in Florida, which deregulated bus service two years ago.

Harold Slaughter, president of the Florida Motor Transport Association says that once the state deregulated, "Northern bus companies brought their bus companies down here during the winter and mom and pop operations sprang up." As a result, numerous members of his organization are "in some kind of financial trouble," he says.

One Florida operator complains of a former driver's buying a van, pulling up to bus stops five minutes before his old company's bus arrived and picking up all the passengers. Three days later, the established operator abandoned the route.

Even some newcomers complain. Paul Keeshin, president of Keeshin Bus Lines, Chicago, which opened an operation in Florida a year ago, says: "There are four times as many bus companies now as when I started. Three of my former employees have opened up companies. They drive themselves and park their buses at home."

Mr. Keeshin says his company started with 10 buses in Fort Lauderdale, planning to concentrate on charter service. He says he charged less than the established competitors, but found that low-overhead competitors charged even lower rates. By now he has cut his Florida fleet to five buses and says he is considering pulling out of the market entirely. "I hope what happened in Florida doesn't happen everywhere else," he says.

Of course, some newcomers with low costs are delighted with the opportunity deregulation has offered. David Spencer, who used to be a Greyhound driver, opened his own company in Clearwater, Fla. Now he runs three buses. He says he has grown because he charges 10% to 15% less than the competition. "My equipment isn't new, so my cost factor isn't as high" as his competitors', Mr. Spencer says. "Competition is always good," he says.

After 23 years of driving buses for a New Jersey concern, Frank Surace heard that Florida had deregulated bus service, quit his job and opened a bus company in Orlando. He has one bus, which he drives himself, His wife, Barbara, runs the office out of the family living room. "It's been great for us," Says Mrs. Surace. "It's a great feeling working for yourself."

What isn't a great feeling, though, is being without a car in any of the numerous tiny Florida towns that have lost bus service entirely through deregulation. "In Florida, we were able to cut out 90–95% of our small towns," says Frank Nageotte, vice chairman of Greyhound Corp. He says many of the stops were moved to nearby highways producing more efficient routes. But some small towns lost service entirely.

The 867 citizens of Mayo, Fla., haven't had any bus service since Greyhound pulled out nearly two years ago. "We have a lot of elderly people who don't have any cars," says Mayor Peter Wilson. "They depended on the buses for transportation. Now if their families can't do for them, they do without."

Clifford Carlstedt, president of the Sarasota, Fla., chapter of the Grey Panthers, which campaigns for older peoples' interests, says: "Deregulation will have a very detrimental effect on older people. A lot of older people can no longer drive or can't afford a car."

William Clark, an official of the South Central Florida Agency on Aging, says: "The main complaint we get from elderly people in rural areas where they've lost bus service is that they've lost independence. For these people, a loss of independence means a loss of dignity and pride."

For many, lack of bus service means a serious loss of hard cash too. "I need to go to the doctor right now, and there is no bus to take me," says Mattie-Lou Stewart, a retired nurse in Webster, Fla. Transportation to her doctor costs $20 round trip. "It takes all the money I have to eat," she says. She receives a monthly Social Security payment of $126.

Though the national deregulation bill contains some safeguards against loss of service, many still worry. "Iowa will certainly lose service," says Joanne Short, director of public transit for the Iowa Department of Transportation. "The quality of life here will definitely be diminished."

SHORT-LIVED FARE CUTS

Though advocates say deregulation can result in lower fares, as happened in many Florida situations, critics say the fare cuts don't always last long. After Florida's deregulation, one operator cut $6 from the Miami-to-Tampa fare. Two months later, it rescinded the cut. Speaking of Arizona operations, a Greyhound spokesman concedes, "I expect fare reductions to be short-lived."

The big operators, who lobbied hard for deregulation in most areas, are moving fast to capitalize on it. Trailways Inc. says it will cut some smaller lines in Arizona. But it has announced 14 new routes in the state, including one between Phoenix and Tucson. Greyhound has started runs linking Phoenix, Tucson and Flagstaff, the state's three biggest cities. It says it has also started a service on the "highly profitable" route linking Phoenix and the Grand Canyon.

Meanwhile, small established operators in Arizona worry a lot. Mark Godwin, general manager of Arizona Bus Lines, fears that deregulation could bring a price war at any time. As a result, he says, "everything we do is very tentative. We don't know what's going to happen."

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the West Virginia Public Service Commission has just informed me that it is still opposed to the bus deregulation measure.

I am ready to vote and I realize there were only 10 votes cast against the bill on Senate passage, including my own vote, and that a vote on this conference report will be overwhelmingly in favor of its adoption, but I wish to register my opposition to the measure again because of the adverse effect it could have on rural communities in West Virginia.

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, we are now considering the conference report to H.R. 3663, the Bus Regulatory Reform Act of 1982.

I believe this legislation, which reduces the burdensome and outdated regulation the intercity bus industry functions under, is necessary and timely. The provisions of the bill are very similar to those contained in the bus deregulation bill which passed the Senate 85 to 10 on June 30, 1982. The language agreed to by the conferees addresses the concerns of the bus industry by opening the door to increased competition. The bill gives the industry greater ability to adjust its operations to meet the demands of its passengers.

The bill also pays special attention to the small and rural communities across the country. Much time and consideration went into the provisions which will affect these towns and cities.

I believe both passengers and the industry will benefit from the provisions of this bill. The President is eager to sign this legislation and I urge you to join me now in supporting the conference report.●

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, H.R. 3663, the Bus Regulatory Reform Act of 1982, will substantially lessen Federal and State regulation of interstate and intrastate bus service and operations. We all hope that improved service to the public and a healthier bus industry will result.

Among other changes, the Bus Regulatory Reform Act of 1982 will make it much easier for bus companies to terminate both interstate and intrastate service. This legislation will also significantly reduce the regulatory oversight of bus tour operations.

These changes have prompted numerous expressions of concern to me by organizations representing the traveling public. The concerns expressed have been that the substantially eased exit from service and greatly reduced regulation of tour operations could result in problems arising from termination of service to communities throughout our country and also problems of bus availability for tour operations.

Because of these concerns, when the bill was reported out by the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, I asked for a recorded vote by the Senate so as to insure close attention to these questions.

Discussions carried on between the American Bus Association, the United Bus Owners of America—both passenger motor carrier industry associations—and the National Tour Brokers Association, and the National Association of Passenger Brokers who organize and operate bus tours, has led to the formation of an intercity bus and passenger tour broker regulatory reform liaison group. This liaison group is being formed to promote constructive implementation of the Bus Regulatory Reform Act and to explore joint solutions to any problems which may arise.

This liaison group will afford a mechanism whereby common concerns of the traveling public, bus operators, and tour brokers can be addressed. Later, I would like to insert in the RECORD a copy of the June 9, 1982, statement by the American Bus Association, the United Bus Owners of America, and the National Tour Brokers Association announcing the formation of this group and explaining its purpose.

I am reassured by the formation of this group that the concerns which have been expressed to me can be addressed if problems arise. Accordingly, I will support the conference report.

As this legislation is implemented, we will all want to make sure that the communities across the country, particularly those in outlying areas, and all the traveling public, in particular the elderly, who perhaps more than any other group depend upon bus service, have their needs for bus service and bus tour availability reasonably met.●

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am ready to vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, perhaps we should have a brief quorum call to advise our colleagues that a rollcall vote is imminent. I will put in a brief quorum call to alert them to that fact. I will try to call it off in 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the adoption of the conference report.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BUMPERS (when his name was called). Present.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABDNOR), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. MCCLURE), and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. SYMMS) are necessarily absent.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), and the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) is absent because of illness in the family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 84, nays 8, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senate cannot return to its business until the Senate is in order. Senators will please retire from the well.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1982—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will resume consideration of the conference report on H.R. 6863.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Senators will please retire from the well.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. President, for the edification of Members on both sides of the aisle, I ask the distinguished majority leader what he may see as the program for the remainder of the day, whether there will be any rollcall votes and if he can at this moment indicate what the situation may be when the Senate returns on September 8.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader.

Mr. President, today I hope and trust that we can finish action on the supplemental appropriations conference report. I expect perhaps more than one vote on that measure.

After that, I do not anticipate that we will transact any other business except the most routine sort of business that might be cleared for action by unanimous consent.

Mr. President, I also expect that after the supplemental is disposed of we will adopt the adjournment resolution which is at the desk and has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. President, when we return on September 8, it is the intention of the leadership to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Hatch constitutional amendment on abortion. I will, of course, seek unanimous consent to do that.

Senators should know, however, that if it is necessary to do that, I will move to consideration of that item.

I also wish to say that, while we came within a hair's breadth of getting unanimous-consent agreement on the whole abortion issue and it fell through for a variety of reasons, I still hope that we can get a unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate to 8 hours as provided in that original request on the Hatch amendment as well as the provision that no amendment to the Hatch amendment will be in order.

If that were the case, then we would debate Hatch on Wednesday and then for a while on Thursday and perhaps dispose of that issue, that is, the constitutional amendment on abortion on Wednesday and Thursday, September 8 and 9.

INTENTION TO FILE CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. President, I intend today later, assuming that the debt limit bill recurs as the pending business, to file a cloture motion which will be a cloture motion to end debate on amendment No. 2038 which amendment amends amendment No. 2031, as modified.

Then, assuming that it is filed today, and I expect to do that, the vote on cloture on that amendment would occur on Thursday.

So if that plan holds, we would have the Hatch debate on Wednesday and Thursday, until the time arrives for the cloture vote on the Helms amendment on Thursday.

I anticipate that Friday of that week, which is September 10, will also be devoted to debate on the debt limit bill.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader be amenable to attempting to get consent that the Senate in voting on the cloture motion on Thursday, September 9 would vote at a certain hour, hopefully an hour, let us say, 2 p.m. in the afternoon or later, because I wish to have a caucus on that day? Since we will not be in on Tuesday, I wish to have a caucus on Thursday.

Mr. BAKER. Yes; I think that point is well made. I am entirely agreeable with that.

Let me check with my clearance staff, and I wish to make that request a little later today.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. METZENBAUM. I am a little bit unclear about the program for the remainder of the day. The majority leader has indicated that he expects to complete the supplemental appropriations bill, which is fine with me, and I have no special concerns about it. However, it is my understanding that we not only have the conference committee report before us but we have 35 amendments that are in disagreement and that amendments thereto are in order, and knowing this body and its propensity, including myself, to offer amendments of that kind, I am curious to know how the majority leader intends to proceed. As the majority leader knows, I, yesterday, spoke to the effect about bringing up an amendment concerning extending unemployment benefits. Will he be good enough to clarify that? I heard that there are other amendments coming from that side. Many of us wish to know how he will handle that.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, assuming that the conference report itself is adopted, and I truly hope we will do that very promptly, of course, under the rule any item in disagreement will be amendable. The nature of the amendment might or might not be subject to a point of order and any Senator is within his right to offer amendments as he may wish. I do not encourage Senators to do that, certainly, but I recognize their right to offer amendments to any item in disagreement that is brought to us from the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I still hope that we can finish this conference report and the items in disagreement this afternoon. The hope may be a vain hope and in that case our alternatives are either to stay late today and come back tomorrow or to take the bill down.

Taking the conference report down will be very difficult because I have in my hand a communication from the administration indicating that while it will be possible under the Food and Forage Act to obligate expenditure for the military and civilian payrolls of the Goverment of the United States it should not make expenditures. I am not certain that is the last word on that subject. But that would pose a nice problem, that is, the problem of whether or not we could issue paychecks for the military and civilian employees of the Government of the United States at the end of August.

So I think we owe the obligation to try to finish that if we can and if we cannot we cannot. I cannot force Senators to stay here, and I cannot force them to enter into agreements, but the answer to the Senator's question is if we adopt the conference report then items in disagreement, as I understand it, would be subject to amendment, and in the regular course of affairs I would observe with great interest how the Senate chose to dispose of that matter.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. First of all, I thank the majority leader for his efforts in helping me to try to get the vote on my matter over the past few months. He has been consistently true to his word in that regard, and I am hoping to achieve that today by offering my amendment to preserve the social security benefits for an additional year as an amendment to one of these amendments in disagreement.

We had a lengthy debate this morning on it, and there may be others of my cosponsors who wish to speak on it. But my intention now is, after the conference report is adopted, to offer my amendment as an amendment to one in disagreement and hope that we can have an up-and-down vote at that point without a point of order being raised against it.

Again, I thank the majority leader for his efforts to make this possible.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, I am advised now that I can clear the request suggested by the minority leader.

ORDER FOR VOTE ON CLOTURE MOTION AT 2 P.M., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1982

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that if a cloture motion is filed, which would be presented to the Senate for a vote on Thursday, September 9, under the provisions of rule XXII, that vote occur at 2 p.m.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. BAKER. Could the Chair put the request first? And then I will be happy to yield.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is there any magic about 2 p.m.? What about 5 p.m.?

Mr. BAKER. No.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. There is considerable magic about the hour of 2 p.m., according to a Senator who is sitting not very far from where I now stand. He prefers it at 2 p.m. inasmuch as he has to be in other places outside the city after 2 p.m.

Mr. DECONCINI. My own problem is I will not be here. I will be in other places at 2 p.m. I would be here at 5 p.m. I realize the problem.

Mr. BAKER. Which is one of the institutional problems of pluralism.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I hope the Senator sitting not very far from where I now stand will express his appreciation to the distinguished Senator from Arizona, and I am sure he will.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I add to my request—no, Mr. President, I started to say that I add to my request that we waive the mandatory live quorum. I think it might just as well be for us to have that quorum at that time.

Mr. President, let me modify the request so that the live quorum provided for under rule XXII will begin at 2 p.m.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I would hope the vote itself would begin at 2 p.m.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have no problem with that. I will rephrase the request so that the vote itself will occur at 2 p.m., and the mandatory quorum under rule XXII will be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question? In reciting what the cloture vote will be on, the Senator used numbers, and I generally consider that the last stages of Potomac swamp fever when we refer to numbers and we do not have an explanation of the bill without numbers.

Would the Senator be so kind as to tell us what the modifications and what the amendments would be pertaining to abortion or school prayer with an explanation beyond just numbers?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President. So far as I can tell, and I have to say to the Senator I never have understood the substance of this debate very well anyway, but as far as I can tell what we are doing is applying the provisions of rule XXII to an amendment to limit debate on the abortion amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is that on the modified amendment, is it modified by Helms or modified by Baucus?

Mr. BAKER. No, it is Helms modified by Helms.

Mr. HEFLIN. Helms modified by Helms

Mr. BAKER. Modified and amended by Helms.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I think what the Senator from Alabama is asking, if I understand it, is cloture on the abortion portion of the Helms amendment, and abortion alone; is that correct?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The amendment has already been modified.

Mr. BAKER. The amendment has been modified, and the second-degree amendment to the amendment has been offered, and the cloture motion is against the abortion amendment which, I believe, is the second degree—Mr. President, the first-degree amendment, which was the prayer amendment, has been modified as a matter of right by the Senator from North Carolina. Then an amendment was offered to the first-degree prayer amendment, which is the abortion amendment. The abortion amendment, the second-degree amendment, has not been modified, but the yeas and nays have been granted.

Mr. President, the cloture motion is against the second-degree amendment, which is the abortion amendment alone.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. And which cannot be modified except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAKER. I agree with the minority leader. It cannot under the rules be modified absent unanimous consent.

I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, would a motion to table be in order in the event cloture is voted? Would a motion to table the Helms amendment be in order?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, let me yield so that the Senator may propound that as a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to table may be made against the matter on which cloture has been invoked.

Mr. BUMPERS. Either before or after cloture?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the majority leader? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished majority leader, is there any word from the White House as to whether or not the veto of the supplemental might occur? We have heard rumors that there might be a veto.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his inquiry. I cannot answer the question. I too have heard those rumors. I have made my recommendations on the bill to the President. The President has not indicated to me, I believe he has not indicated to anyone else, what his final disposition of this measure will be.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if the majority leader will further indulge me, may I ask does the majority leader intend to adopt a pro forma resolution or if he can tell us how does he intend to adjourn so as to preclude a pocket veto of the measure should the President do so?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I do not believe the President will choose that. I cannot assure the Senator that that is absolutely impossible, but having inquired into that it is my distinct impression the President will choose either to sign or veto the measure. I do not anticipate a pocket veto, and the resolution sent to us by the House is an adjournment resolution.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. If the President should veto the supplemental while the Senate is out what would be the plans of the President to call us back or what would be the plans of the majority leader?

Mr. BAKER. It would not be my plan to ask the Senate to return. I have made no provision for that in the adjournment resolution, which is the only authority I believe the leadership would have in this respect if it were to be granted by the Senate. I do not believe, however, that the President would entertain a call for the Senate or the House of Representatives to return.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, as I heard the majority leader a few moments ago, failure of passage of this measure would create some problems. If the President were to veto the measure those same problems would be created. I personally would like to express the hope that if the President vetoes this measure that the adjournment resolution will allow the leader to call us back, if necessary, so that the Senate will be here in the event a veto should take place. I am concerned about the Senate being out if the President is going to veto the measure, and I think he should let us know now, I personally feel he should let us know now, whether he is going to veto the bill. The majority leader is in no position to extract that from the President, but I think the President should let the Congress know before we go out on this break what his intentions are, else Congress could be blamed for being away at a time when a veto occurred on a measure which, from what I understood the majority leader correctly to say, could create some problems if it is not enacted before the break.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I assure him I will continue to recommend to the President and state my own views and to solicit from him his intentions. I understand the Senator's concern, the minority leader's concern.

I point out that in this particular case the House of Representatives orginated the adjournment resolution, and I believe they would act on a veto if indeed the bill were vetoed before the bill reached us. In order to change that I suppose we would have to, if we wanted to, amend the House-passed resolution and send it back to them. But I think, Mr. President, we may have some further views on that in the course of the day. I hope so.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I would hope so and I hope, may I say with much respect to the majority leader, if we cannot get that answer out of the White House if we are going to pass this measure, I hope the adjournment resolution will be so amended so that the leadership will be in position to act if necessary to keep these problems from occurring and the Congress to be criticized for being out and unable to act.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. THURMOND. As I understand it, we will be on the abortion question when we come back and, as I understand, we would then go, after we finish that, to the crime package, S. 995, is that correct?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have discussed with the distinguished President pro tempore both of those measures, and it is my intention to proceed to both of those measures when we return, at some point and do so promptly. But I must say to the Senator from South Carolina that both of those measures will draw objection to their consideration by unanimous consent and we will have to negotiate a little on how we schedule them and when we schedule them.

Mr. THURMOND. I wish to remind the majority leader that we have already gotten unanimous consent to take up the crime package.

Mr. BAKER. No; I think we have a limitation on the crime package but we do not yet have unanimous consent to proceed to its consideration. In any event, I will confer with the distinguished Senator and we will do the best we can. But he should know that I do intend to deal with both of those measures and to do so promptly after we return in September.

Mr. THURMOND. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the majority leader yield just for an observation?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. BUMPERS. I know of three amendments that are probably going to be offered on the amendments to this conference report. The majority leader may know of more. But if we are going to get out of here today, it seems to me we are going to have to have some kind of agreement.

I was just wondering if the majority leader might consider making those three amendments the only ones in order on this, unless he knows of others, and get maybe a 30-minute time agreement. I feel certain the Senator from Michigan, maybe the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Arizona will all agree. Then we would have some more definitive idea of when we will get out of here today.

Mr. BAKER. The Senator's point is well taken. I will pursue that, as they say, with vigor, and I hope to make a request at a later time.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I wish to underscore what the minority leader said; that if there is a real danger that the supplemental will be vetoed that the adjournment resolution ought to provide in it the opportunity for the leaders of the Senate or the Congress to call the Congress back in if that is necessary.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1982—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have worked out with the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) an agreement that we are ready to move to the adoption of the conference report in order to bring the amendment before the body and begin the debate on the amendments that may be offered by the Members.

Therefore, I move the adoption of the conference report on H.R. 6863.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report on H.R. 6863 was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this is also a request that has been worked out with the interested parties. Let me first of all make an observation.

The committee amendments are amendable. There are two amendments that are in disagreement, amendments 115 and 150, which are not amendable. So, in order to expedite the process here, I ask unanimous consent that we adopt the committee amendments Nos. 2 through 177 en bloc.

What that does it to leave available for Members to offer amendments from the floor on three committee amendments that are available. We only need one, for that matter, I thought, to make sure everyone felt that we had plenty of opportunity for handling amendments, that we would exclude from the committee amendments en bloc Nos. 180, 182, and 183, and that we would exclude from this unanimous-consent agreement the two nonamendable amendments, amendments No. 115 and No. 150.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator from Oregon yield for a question?

Mr. HATFIELD. Yes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is it not a fact that to proceed in that manner that certain amendments which might be germane might become nongermane by reason of the exclusion of all of the amendments that are now being proposed?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to have the Senator address that question to the Chair. My understanding is the germaneness goes to the total bill rather than to a single amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In connection with an appropriations bill, it is the ruling of the Chair that it is the action of the Senate itself which determines the germaneness.

Is there objection?

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. HATFIELD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, unless a Senator who has the floor yields for the purpose of calling a quorum, another Senator cannot suggest the absence of a quorum. I have noted recently that this has happened too many times. Someone suggested the absence of a quorum yesterday when the majority leader had the floor and made a unanimous-consent request. The majority leader did not lose the floor by virtue of his making the unanimous-consent request, but another Senator just said, "I suggest the absence of a quorum." That cannot be done unless the Senator who has the floor yields for that purpose

I hope that Senators would be more cognizant of their rights and I also hope that the Chair would protect Senators in that regard. I have no criticism of the Chair in this instance or of the Parliamentarian. It is just something that is sort of automatic when a Senator suggests the absence of a quorum, that the Chair will say, "The clerk will call the roll."

But I say again and again, that the Senator holding the floor, in this instance, Mr. HATFIELD, must yield for that purpose. Yesterday, the majority leader had the floor and put a unanimous-consent request, yet a Senator suggested the absence of a quorum and the quorum was called without the majority leader being asked if he yielded for that purpose. I hope that we all would be more cognizant of the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is correct.

The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to first of all thank the minority leader. He is extraordinarily expert in parliamentary procedure. I appreciate his observation. He has helped me, as one individual Senator, to recognize my rights a little more precisely than I understood them before.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. In this instance, no harm was done. But it could be to great disadvantage of a Senator who had the floor if such a practice is allowed to continue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Oregon to concur in certain House amendments en bloc.

The Chair would like to point out that amendment No. 182, is an amendment to strike and would not be further amendable.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, one is sufficient for the purpose of our procedures, so I would eliminate that from my exclusion so we would still have Nos. 180 and 183 to hang amendments on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendments, Nos. 2 through 177 (except Nos. 115 and 150), and committee amendment No. 182, agreed to en bloc, are as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert:

"FOOD AND NUTRITION SERVICE

"CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS

After the amounts authorized by this subsection have been transferred to the Trust Funds, the provisions of paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 201(m) of the Social Security Act (as added by subsection (a)) shall be applicable to unnegotiated benefit checks.

(2) As used in paragraph (1), the term "unnegotiated benefit checks" means the checks issued under title II of the Social Security Act prior to the date of the enactment of this Joint Resolution, which remain unnegotiated after the twelfth month following the date on which they were issued.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. Would the Senator be agreeable to a time agreement on this particular amendment, perhaps a half hour equally divided?

Mr. LEVIN. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I make that request, a half hour equally divided on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this amendment would preserve for 1 year most of the social security student benefits for children of deceased or disabled workers and children of soldiers killed in Vietnam.

The cost of this partial, temporary restoration of this program would be offset by crediting to the social security trust fund, instead of the general fund, uncashed social security checks.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment on my behalf and on behalf of Senator WEICKER and 23 other Sentors. I ask unanimous consent that they be added as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The cosponsors are as follows: Messrs. BUMPERS, BURDICK, CRANSTON, CANNON, DODD, FORD, HEFLIN, HUDDLESTON, INOUYE, KENNEDY, MATSUNAGA, MELCHER, METZENBAUM, MITCHELL, WEICKER, BIDEN, BRADLEY, SASSER, SARBANES, RIEGLE, RANDOLPH, PELL, TSONGAS, and STENNIS.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, we have had a lengthy discussion of this amendment this morning.

By the way, I yield myself so much time as I may consume.

This amendment is absolutely essential if we are going to correct for 1 year two very basic adjustments which we have perpetrated. One was the precipitous discontinuation of a social security benefit to children whose parents are deceased or disabled, approximately 250,000 high school students this year being in that situation.

Many of these children, about 50,000 of these children, are the children of soldiers who went to Vietnam with the promise that if they did not return, their children would be given survivor's benefits through college. Forty-five thousand of these children are children of soldiers who went to their graves believing that that promise would be kept.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I hope that promise will be kept. I ask unanimous consent that I may be added as cosponsor to this amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask that the Senator be added as a cosponsor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The name of Mr. Zorinsky was added as a cosponsor, by unanimous consent.)

Mr LEVIN. Mr. President, we now come to a point where we are going to decide whether, for 1 more year, a solemn commitment of this Government, to people who, for the most part, cannot fight back, will be kept. Sixty percent of the parents are deceased; 30 percent of the parents of these children are disabled. The question is whether or not for 1 more year this promise is going to be kept.

The 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act phased out this benefit. We decided to reduce it by one-quarter for each of the next 4 years. This amendment does not change that phaseout. All this amendment does is to permit this year's seniors in high school to participate in the program at the reduced level.

As a result, the cost of this amendment has been dramatically reduced. Instead of being the approximately $900 million for the 4 years that these children would have gone to college if we had delayed the entire program for 1 year, the total cost is about $245 million because we do not change the phaseout which has been adopted as part of that Reconciliation Act.

Now the question comes, How do you pay for it? That is a question which we should be very conscious of.

The way this amendment pays for this is to credit to the social security account uncashed social security checks. Instead of those uncashed checks, which now total about $250 million, being credited to the general fund, those checks will be credited, if this amendment is agreed to, to the social security trust fund.

As a result, there is a total offset for the cost of this amendment, and we would be able to have all of these children go to college if they so wished without harming the social security trust fund.

I have read to this body this morning testimony of parents who do survive these children, in many cases the widow of a deceased soldier. I have read statements from many Members of the House of Representatives who have introduced similar legislation. I am not going to repeat all of that testimony and all of those statements. I simply want to urge my colleagues to give these students a chance to do what we promised them they could do, and that is to go to college.

I started out by saying there was a double injustice this year. The first injustice is that we deprive these students precipitously of a benefit that they were promised. Again, about 50,000 of these are children of soldiers who were lost in Vietnam.

But there was a second injustice this year. That is that the Social Security Administration in two out of six regional areas sent out the wrong information, and that error was not corrected in time for all of these students who got the wrong information to take necessary steps to matriculate in time so that their benefit could be preserved.

So the double injustice that exists this year is now before us. This amendment will correct that double injustice. It is a double injustice which I hope will never be repeated because if this phaseout continues, I would hope that the Social Security Administration would send out correct information so that we do not have a repetition of the mistake that took place this year. That is what is unique about this year. That is why I pleaded with the members of the Finance Committee to support this amendment, because it is offset by money being credited to the social security fund for uncashed checks, as it should be credited, and again because of the mistake which took place this year, which I again assume will not be repeated in future years.

Mr. President, I believe there are others who may want to speak on this amendment. At this point I will yield the floor.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Michigan yield me some time?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield 3 minutes to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seven minutes and thirteen seconds.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I support the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. Over the last few months he has brought to our attention a serious situation—a situation that should be of concern to all of us in the Senate who care about good government and maintaining public trust.

Let me underscore maintaining public trust. We have diluted that here in the last few years and I think we ought to restore it.

We have an overriding objective in this, the 97th Congress, to reduce the size of the Federal deficit in order to diminish the Federal Government's intrusion into the credit markets and free the economy from the shakles of high interest rates. In our zeal to reduce spending and control deficits, we sometimes move too fast and lose sight of our basic responsibilities as elected officials to honor and maintain Government commitments and preserve the integrity of out institutions.

Last year in the 1981 Budget Reconciliation Act, we reneged—I underscore, we reneged—on a Government commitment. We broke an agreement with the social security covered worker that provided that, in the event of his death, disability, or retirement, his children would receive Government assistance in obtaining a college education. Then we compounded this mistake by failing to give notice to last year's high school seniors that their social security student benefits were being terminated.

Suddenly, last spring, without prior warning, over 250,000 high school seniors who were making plans to attend college this fall had their social security benefits terminated. Their plans for a college education—an education their parents were led to believe would be affordable with Government assistance—were disrupted.

Whom are we talking about here? The great majority of these students come from families with gross income below $20,000. Approximately 80 percent of these students have at least one parent deceased or disabled. These students, because of the death, disability, or retirement of their income-earning parent, cannot otherwise afford a college education without some Government assistance. They are people in need and they were told all along that Government assistance would be there. But, in last year's reconciliation bill, Congress broke that promise.

In 1965, Congress enacted the social security student benefit program because it felt the underlying policy of the social security system to provide income security to America's workers and their families required an extension of the existing social security child benefits program to include children who were in college. No matter what one thinks about the merits of the social security benefit program, and whether it should have ever been established to begin with, expanded, or eliminated, the important point is that these families made financial plans based on that Government benefit. When the parents made a decision on buying life insurance, or putting money away for a college degree, they took into account that the social security student benefit assistance would be there in the event of the wage earner's death, disability, or retirement.

If Congress, in its wisdom, decided that the social security student benefit program no longer merited existence, then some mechanism should be provided for phasing out the program so that people could make financial plans based on that change in benefits. However, just the opposite happened. When we passed the 1981 Reconciliation Act, we did provide a phaseout for students currently in school, but all high school students were left high and dry. Benefits were immediately terminated with little notice. In fact, some students had no notice until the May 1 effective date. To top it all off, many students were given erroneous information when at least two Social Security Administration district offices mailed outdated student benefit brochures spelling out the previous law's guidelines that these students were eligible to continue to receive benefits when they entered college this fall.

Mr. President, I would like to preserve the social security student benefit program for a longer time to give families who have relied on this program a chance to adjust their financial plans. However, I realize that the Federal Government has serious budgetary problems and there is little sentiment in this Congress for reinstating the full social security student benefit program. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan does much less that that; in fact, it does less than legislation he introduced earlier this year. The Senator from Michigan is mindful of the budgetary problems we face. His amendment has a 3-year cost of $245 million but will not impose any further burdens on the social security trust funds. This year's high school seniors would be eligible for benefits but would not receive the full social security benefits; instead, the benefits would be reduced 25 percent and then completely phased out by 1985, as current law provides.

An important element of this amendment is that it does not increase the burden to the social security trust funds. All added costs arising from the extension of the social security student benefits to this year's high school seniors are picked up by the provisions of the second part of this amendment which transfers uncashed social security benefit checks from the general fund to the social security trust funds.

When social security benefit checks are written, there is a transfer of funds from the social security trust funds to the general fund in the Department of Treasury. However, over the life of the social security system, $255 million has accumulated in the Treasury in uncashed checks. These Treasury obligations remain a charge on the general fund, but have not been cashed. As a result, the general fund has been enriched by the amount of $255 million taken from the social security trust funds.

Mr. President, while I am a cosponsor of, and support the Senator from Michigan's amendment, I recognize that this is only a temporary solution to an immediate problem and does not address the full problem of a broken Government promise. I still believe the Federal Government owes more to these families. Congress should maintain and honor the Government commitment that was made to the social security-covered worker. It is not right for the Government to make a promise encouraging families to change their financial plans and then, literally overnight, turn around and break that promise.

That is why I have introduced legislation to provide loan assistance to students who are impacted by the termination of the social security student benefit program. My legislation expands the guaranteed student loan program to allow children who would otherwise have been eligible for social security student benefits, if not for last year's Budget Reconciliation Act, to receive a supplemental loan. S. 2655, the Student Loan Assistance Amendments of 1982, which I introduced on June 22, is a modest, low-cost program that seeks to assist only those social security-covered students who have been truly impacted by these hasty changes. The bill provides for a needs test that limits the additional guaranteed student loan funds to only those students who have a demonstrated need. I think it is a modest proposal in light of the jeopardy present and future social security child beneficiaries are placed in with respect to obtaining a college education. S. 2655 does not restore the social security student benefit program, but it does honor a Government promise and at a very small cost relative to the social security student benefit program.

I do not intend to bring up this amendment at this time. Senator STAFFORD, chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Arts, and Humanities, has graciously agreed to hold hearings on this bill next month. I thank the chairman for his courteous accommodation in this respect and I urge my colleagues to consider cosponsoring this legislation.

In the meantime, I support the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. It is a good amendment; it corrects an injustice and will serve to restore some measure of faith in our Government while meeting the urgent need for financial assistance which these students face this fall. We have all heard the stories from our own State of the last-minute, frantic scrambling by high school seniors and colleges, universities, and other post-secondary institutions, trying to somehow get these students enrolled by last May 1 in a full-time curriculum so that they would continue to be eligible for reduced benefits during the 4-year phaseout. There were many students who were not fortunate enough to have been able to meet this deadline. For these students and their families, the dream of a college education has been postponed or eliminated. These students will not be in the 1982 freshman class without the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. They will not be there because may of them received notification of benefit termination too late, or received misinformation from the Social Security Administration. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan attempts to correct this injustice by allowing these students to enroll in a postsecondary institution until October of this year. However, it does not provide full benefits, but integrates them into the current funding phaseout by reducing their benefits by 25 percent this year, and each succeeding year, completely eliminating their benefits, as scheduled, in 1985.

I urge acceptance of this amendment by the Senate and commend the Senator from Michigan for his efforts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kansas 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment. We have been trying to figure out, first of all, what equities were on the side of the amendment. We met as recently as yesterday with Mr. Schweiker, Secretary of HHS, and with social security representatives. We have been on the phone with them, in fact, as late as 9 or 10 o'clock last night and again this morning. I want to explain my reasons for opposition to the amendment.

It seems to me that the Senator from Michigan has correctly described what the amendment would do. It would delay the effective date of the social security student benefit elimination enacted in the 1981 Reconciliation Act, as pointed out by both the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Kentucky. If the 25-percent reduction in benefits proceeds as under current law and only the effective date is delayed, the 5-year cost would total about $245 million.

Mr. President, we have gone through a rather difficult experience in the past several days, trying not only to reduce spending but also to raise revenues. Already we are back to the same old ways, a day after that experience—which caused a great deal of anguish for some Members who supported it—trying to spend Federal money we do not have and increase the burden on many Americans who would like to see us slow the growth of spending.

Mr. President, we had this amendment offered in the Senate Finance Committee and the vote was 12 to 6 against. There are 20 members on our committee, 11 Republicans, 9 Democrats. It would seem to me to be untimely to modify the student benefit law again at this late date—already 3½ months after the elimination became effective. Students who "double-enrolled" to take advantage of the May 1 loophole have already borne the inconveniences in order to extend the duration of their benefits. Students who missed the May 1 date have, by now, made alternative financial plans for this fall.

The amendment would allow another entire class of students on the benefit rolls. I assume next year, we would have someone else trying to make another exception. Pretty soon, we would unravel all we did last year in trying to get a grip on the size of the Federal debt.

The elimination of the student benefit was broadly supported. It was recommended by GAO and proposed not only by President Reagan, but also by Presidents Carter and Ford. The last three Presidents have tried to eliminate the student benefit. The student benefit was recognized to be a poorly targeted, duplicative Federal payment. Benefits were paid regardless of academic performance or need. The student benefit was created in 1965 at a time when there was a shortage of Federal aid for higher education and the social security trust funds were in considerably better financial shape. The benefit is a recent add-on, not essential to the program's basic mission.

Help is available to students through specifically targeted educational assistance programs and other public assistance programs. Since 1965, non-social-security Federal student assistance has risen from $272 million a year to over $7 billion. In addition, several billion more is available for students from State-sponsored scholarships and low-income supplements as well as from private lending institutions.

Since the student benefit has been payable even to children of well-to-do parents and to students performing poorly in school, it is an expensive and inefficient way of providing financial assistance.

The timing of the phaseout was a matter of concern to the administration last year and to Congress, so Congress changed it. The Finance Committee delayed the effective date to protect students who were high school seniors graduating in 1981. It was the consensus of the Finance Committee and the Congress that students graduating after 1981 would have adequate time to adjust to the new law.

Mr. President, there has been some talk about how there is equity in this amendment because a third of the offices sent out incorrect notices. But they did not continue to send out the wrong notice. It is my understanding that about 8 to 12 percent of the students may have received an improper notice, but that was immediately corrected. By April, 800,000 pamphlets had been mailed to all student beneficiaries aged 18 to 22.

The amendment offered by Senator LEVIN would also require that the social security trust funds be reimbursed for the amount of unnegotiated benefit checks—checks that have not been cashed after a year.

There has been some claim that we are going to pay for this restoration. The sponsor of the amendment claims that it does not cost anything. We are going to take all the unnegotiated social security checks that are currently credited to the Federal Treasury and shift that sum into the social security trust fund. We are taking the money out of one pocket and putting it into another. As I understand it, this is not new money. We are just saying, if the checks are not cashed, instead of giving them to the Treasury, we will take the proceeds from those social security checks and put it into the trust fund.

If that works, Mr. President, our problems are over. We can solve the deficit just by juggling money from one fund to another and say, "Oh, we are paying for it, it does not cost the taxpayers any money." I suggest that all we would be doing is creating additional administrative costs and not saving any money at all. There is no saving.

According to the social security actuaries, the total amount of past unnegotiated checks is about $280 to $300 million. Under this amendment Treasury would have to reimburse the trust funds for this amount. The transfer to the trust fund in the future would be about $30 million a year.

I do not know where the Treasury is going to get the $300 million to reimburse the social security trust fund, but in any event there is other legislation pending with a lot of sponsors on both sides to deal with this particular problem.

The Social Security Administration, and Treasury agree that legislation is needed to enable the trust fund to be credited for uncashed checks. That legislation is being considered separately. However, it never occurred to anybody in the administration that that is a savings; that somehow we can just take what has been done in the past and push it into another fund and claim we paid for the cost of this program change.

I am also told by those who have been working with this program that students who would have their benefits restored under this amendment have already made college plans for the fall, probably applying for college this spring and registering this summer. According to the administration, it could take until December to locate these students and restore benefits.

As I understand it, the amendment requires that we notify all the beneficiaries of such a change. There are more than 4 million child beneficiaries and only about 200,000 affected by this amendment. That would be an administrative nightmare and a large cost. If we are merely trying to spend Federal money, then this may be a good amendment. But I again remind my colleagues who voted for the balanced budget amendment 2 weeks ago—here we are with business as usual: Vote for the balanced budget amendment and later try to figure a way to spend more money.

I would like to put in the RECORD at a later time a list of those who made great speeches on the Senate floor for a balanced budget amendment, because here is another test. Certainly we can say, "Oh, yes, it is too bad that somebody got the wrong notice, 8 to 12 percent of the student beneficiaries." The mistake should not have been made. I apologize for whichever agency may have made the mistake, but that does not suggest that we are to come in and take care of a whole class because somebody received the wrong notice.

I say to those who are concerned about fiscal integrity, a balanced budget, reducing the size of the Federal Government, the size of the Federal debt and Federal spending, here is a chance to strike a blow for freedom.

Mr. President, we discussed this matter with the Secretary of Health and Human Services to see if there were some way to accommodate the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I know that he has a more expensive amendment and that this is a fallback position. But I believe this is much like the minimum benefit struggle we had last year. We went through the agony of trying to eliminate the minimum benefit and then the stalwarts on the House side decided there was too much heat, so they tried to restore the minimum benefit. We ended up with a partial restoration of something the Congress had already done. And here we are, months later, trying to undo what we did last year as far as student benefits are concerned.

The elimination of these benefits was supported by President Ford, by President Carter, and by President Reagan. The benefit elimination was supported by the General Accounting Office because there was no relationship between the benefit and need or anything else that the General Accounting Office could determine.

I hope my colleagues, notwithstanding the eloquent argument by the distinguished Senator from Michigan and his sincere concern about these students, will not adopt this amendment.

I am pleased that the Senator from Michigan has been able to get this vote, because I know it is very important to him.

I have been trying to cooperate with the leadership and others so that the Senator might have this vote. The reason for having the vote now ostensibly was so that students might be notified. As I understand it, most of the students who are going to school this fall are starting this week. They probably enrolled this summer or this spring. It would take until December to find those who may not have made other plans.

My colleagues might appreciate having some background on the social security student benefit. When this benefit was added in 1965, student assistance from other sources was in the millions and now it is $7 billion. There are all kinds of opportunities for students. We do not need to add the student benefit back on to the social security system. I think we properly eliminated it last summer. That does not mean we are not concerned about poor students, but why should some well-to-do student get this benefit. I think the other educational assistance programs work better.

(Mr. EAST assumed the chair.)

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask the Senator, is it not true that while we would like to have accorded the Senator an opportunity to vote on his amendment at an earlier date, the fact remains that we are now at August 20, the Senate is about to take a recess and the House is going to take a recess, and we will not be back until September? If the bill is amended, does that mean that the House is going to be able to vote on that amendment before we get back?

Mr. DOLE. I do not think so. I tried to reach the Speaker this morning to thank him for his help on the tax bill, and he had already left for Boston. It is my understanding the House will be gone until September 8 and they would not act on this conference report until at least September 8.

Mr. LONG. So no one could feel any assurance that the benefit proposed will be available until after the House has an opportunity to act on it; is that correct?

Mr. DOLE. That is the understanding of the Senator from Kansas. In fact, if the amendment succeeds, it goes back to the House. The House is empty. There is no one there to do anything.

Whether they want to come back to take care of this amendment, the Senator from Kansas does not know.

Mr. LONG. The point I have in mind is that it would be impossible to do anything before, let us say, the second week of September, and by that time the people affected would have been further along in making their plans for the fall. Whatever school they are going to go to, they would have made their plans to attend or planned to do something else.

Mr. DOLE. I might say to the Senator from Louisiana that we are advised by administration officials who have checked that for us that most students have already made their plans for this school year. They indicate that if the amendment were passed today, not in the middle of September, but if it were passed today and signed by the President, it would take a considerable time—a couple of months in any event—even to locate the students.

Now, maybe that is no excuse, but it is a practical fact that we must face. School has started.

Mr. LONG. Of course, it will be even further along by the second week of September, and even then the Social Security Administration would still have to send out the letters through the mail. If the person receiving the letter wants to do something about it, that will take even more time. So it is a late date at which to try to move. That is the point.

Mr. DOLE. I have asked HHS if they could determine how many students are being disadvantaged by the elimination of this program. It is my understanding that if in fact the students are low income, other provisions can be made. If in fact we find that a great number of students cannot go to school because of the loss of this benefit, maybe we ought to change some of the other student loan or Pell grant programs. But let us try to keep social security for social security. As a matter of fact, the National Commission on Social Security is meeting today trying to figure a way to keep social security afloat. Are we prepared to spend this much money when the system is in so much trouble?

The savings the Senator claims for the transfer of unnegotiated checks to the trust fund are not real savings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises that all of the time of the opponents of the amendment has expired. The Senator from Michigan has 4 minutes and 39 seconds remaining.

Mr. DOLE. The proponents' time has expired, too?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; they have 4 minutes 39 seconds. The opponents' time has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is estimated that 250,000 to 300,000 high school graduated seniors would benefit from this amendment. As many as 75,000 to 100,000 of these young people received erroneous information relative to their eligibility for future benefits.

Thousands of incorrect brochures went out from the social security headquarters, regional offices in Kansas City, and in Birmingham, as well as from two out of six centers nationwide. So a lot of mistaken information was sent out, and it was sent out in my area of Alabama, which causes me particular concern.

There have been some remarks concerning the fact that rich college students would be receiving the social security benefits under the Levin amendment. But according to a 1979 GAO report, the percentage of college students receiving social security, by family income, was as follows: first, 29 percent of the students had family income under $6,000; second, 53 percent of the students had family income under $8,000; third, 71 percent of the students had family income under $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises that the Senator's 1 minute has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, first, on the question of the House of Representatives, the problem is not in the House of Representatives, I say to the Senator from Louisiana. The problem is in the U.S. Senate, which has been unable to bring this matter to a vote.

There are eight bills in the House of Representatives to extend this deadline, with 250 sponsors; and we have assurance that it this amendment is agreed to by the Senate, it will be agreed to by the House.

The problem has been in the Senate, in getting this matter to a vote. I am glad we have brought it to a vote today, because we face the argument, "Look how late it is." If we had waited until September, that argument would have been much more telling. But it is still August, and there is still time to do justice.

We have hundreds of thousands of students out there who are waiting for word from the U.S. Congress as to whether or not we are going to keep this commitment at these reduced levels for 1 additional year.

Again I emphasize: 50,000 of these children are the children of soldiers who went to Vietnam, having been promised that if they did not come back, their kids would have this social security benefit through college. Now it is up to us to redeem that pledge. The House will redeem it. They will do their business. They have 250 sponsors on a bill. It is up to us to redeem this pledge now to these soldiers who are now in their graves.

The testimony before the House was eloquent. Mrs. James from New Jersey:

> Congress has robbed these children of the educational opportunities that their parents earned for them. It also has robbed them of their faith in their Government. I beg of you, restore their funding. Restore their faith in their country.

Mr. President, the chairman correctly talks about fiscal integrity. He has led the battle for it, and I give him great credit, and the Senator from Louisiana has joined in that. This is a matter of integrity, but it is not just fiscal integrity. It is governmental integrity that we are talking about, as to whether or not commitments that are made are going to be kept.

Finally, if I may conclude in this way, there was a double injustice this year, and this amendment will correct the second part of the injustice as well as the first.

The false information that was sent out this year was not corrected for all these students. The Associate Commissioner of Social Security, Mr. Sandy Krenk, testified before the House that they had no way of identifying which children received the incorrect pamphlet.

Mr. President, we can correct a double injustice with a relatively small outlay of funds for 1 additional year without doing violence to the changes which the chairman of the Finance Committee and others worked so hard to incorporate into the social security bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I just want to indicate that there is a bill being considered now—I think by Senator QUAYLE and others—to take care of the problems suggested about Vietnam veterans, but not making it a part of the social security system. That is the basic difference, and I want the record to indicate that.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) in the amendment which has been proposed to H.R. 6863, supplemental appropriations, 1982 conference report, which will preserve for 1 year most of the social security student benefits for children of deceased and disabled workers and children of soldiers who were killed in Vietnam.

The amendments enacted in 1981 eliminated social security student benefits for new beneficiaries not enrolled in a postsecondary institution by May 1982. I believe that this works an unfair and unnecessary hardship on the children of deceased and disabled workers and on the children of military personnel killed in Vietnam.

The amendment which I have cosponsored sets the enrollment deadline back from May to October 1982, which would allow this fall's college entrants to complete their education with the aid of social security benefits which they had every expectation that they would continue to receive.

Most of the children which would be affected by my amendment come from families with marginal income. About 45,000 of these young people are children of deceased military personnel who lost their lives in Vietnam. As the law existed at that time there was a commitment that, if they were sent to Vietnam and lost their lives there, their children would receive the social security benefits through college.

The cost of this amendment over a 3-year period is only $245 million. However, another part of the amendment requires that the cost of partially restoring the program as proposed by the amendment would be offset by crediting to the social security fund instead of to the general fund uncashed social security checks.

Mr. President, I believe that this is a fair and just amendment and it would correct an injustice which resulted from the legislation the Congress adopted last year. It will give the students in question relief that they urgently need and require. I hope that the amendment will be adopted by the Congress.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today to support the amendment of the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Levin). This amendment addresses a matter of crucial importance to some 250,000 high school seniors planning to further their educations this fall.

These students are dependent on social security benefits to supplement their postsecondary education. Last year, the administration was successful in pushing through changes in social security affecting student benefits. The changes contained in the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981 included the elimination of social security benefits for new student beneficiaries not enrolled in college full time before May 1, 1982. For current recipients, beginning this month the amount of benefits will be reduced each year by 25 percent of the August 1981 amount.

I would like to point out to my colleagues that these benefits are not a handout. They are directly related to the amount of earnings lost due to the death, disability, or retirement of the parent and are not related to the costs incurred in attending school. According to a report by the Congressional Research Service, these benefits are much more than a form of educational assistance, they also serve as basic income support to replace a part of the lost earnings of the parent upon which the student depended up until the time the parent either retired, became disabled, or died.

To further compound this injustice, the Social Security Administration failed to officially notify last year's high school seniors of the eligibility changes, phaseout and subsequent elimination of the benefits under the Reconciliation Act. And an undetermined number of students received erroneous information about their eligibility for future benefits.

This amendment attempts to rectify the unfair treatment accorded these high school seniors, 84 percent of which come from families with income below $20,000. In my own State of Tennessee, some 4,700 students will be affected. Without these benefits, it will be impossible for many of these students to continue their education.

I also support the return of some $255 million in unnegotiated social security checks to the social security trust funds where they rightfully belong. At a time when the social security system is facing both short- and long-term financial difficulties, the return of this money is at least a step in the right direction.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment redressing a major inequity that followed enactment of the phaseout of social security student benefits last year. Many recipients were either misinformed or not informed at all of the effects of this change until just before their graduation last spring. This left most students and their families without sufficient time to evaluate and apply for other sources of financial aid.

In the 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act, Congress phased out student benefits over a 4-year period. However, to be eligible for the reduced levels of benefits, students had to be enrolled in a postsecondary educational institution by May 1982. Although some high school seniors were able to adjust their plans so that they were enrolled in college by that date, the vast majority of college-bound children of deceased and disabled workers did not receive adequate notice. Thus, they will be denied the financial assistance that they had been counting on to help meet the ever rising costs of a college education.

It is estimated that 300,000 seniors were affected by this abrupt cutoff. Furthermore, as many as 75,000 to 100,000 were actually misinformed regarding their eligibility for student benefits. This is because two of the regional social security offices mistakenly sent out old brochures that included guidelines based on prior law.

The amendment offered by Senator LEVIN is a responsible one. It does not alter the phaseout of benefits, as defined in last year's reconciliation bill. It merely enables those high school seniors who graduated last spring to qualify for the reduced level of payments. I believe that this is simply a matter of fairness. Those graduated seniors who did not have the flexibility in their schedules to take advantage of the May 1982 deadline should not have their education plans disrupted by this abrupt termination of benefits.

This partial restoration of benefits is done in a responsible manner. Rather than cause a drain from the already fiscally strained trust funds, this amendment includes a partial offset for the increase in outlays. It does so by providing that uncashed social security checks, which currently remain in the general fund, will be returned to the social security trust funds. The Social Security Administration estimates that the accumulated total of unnegotiated checks is $255 million. This amount is expected to grow by $50 million annually. This simple accounting change can help pay for this worthwhile reform.

Mr. President, this amendment restores equity in a fiscally sound manner. I urge its adoption.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by Senator LEVIN. This amendment is intended to right a very serious wrong. The action taken last summer in reconciliation jeopardized the future of hundreds of thousands of students across this country who are depending on social security benefits to fulfill their dreams of a college education.

The action we took last summer will mean an end to that dream for many of these youngsters and their families.

When the administration proposed eliminating student benefits last year it justified the action on grounds that this program violates the real purpose of social security. They argued that just because someone is old, or disabled, or dies, does not mean we have any responsibility to educate their children. After all, there are other programs to assist those who want to go on to college. Never mind that this year alone the Reagan administration would cut Pell grants by $800 million, guaranteed student loans by $912 million, and eliminate virtually all campus based aid.

In order to put this issue in perspective, it may help to know more about these 300,000 students who face having their benefits cut off. These young people live in cities and towns all across the country. Over 80 percent of these students have one or both parents who are deceased or disabled; 70 percent come from families with incomes below $15,000; over half have incomes under $8,000.

The Washington Post told Debbie Davis' story a few months ago. Her plight was brought to President Reagan's attention. Debbie is a cheerleader and honor student from Winder, Ga. Her father is dead and her mother has moved away. She's on her own, without the social security benefit she cannot go to college. The President was moved by her story and wants to help.

But Debbie Davis is only one of 300,000 seniors across the country whose future is in doubt.

There are the children of Evelyn Grubb, Madeline Van Wagenen, and Clair Leaver. All of these women are widows of the Vietnam war. Their husbands undertook dangerous missions, believing that the Government would provide for their wives and children if they did not return. They were wrong. Their widows are organizing others like themselves into a group called "Survivors for Sacrifice" to fight for their children's benefits.

The Veterans' Administration estimates 46,000 sons and daughters of those who gave their lives for their country will be affected by the cutoff of benefits.

The 7,000 high school seniors in my own State will have the benefits they were counting on taken away.

Gary Cooper is 18 and lives in East Sandwich, Mass. He has been partially blind since he was 5. Four years ago his father died. His mother is raising Gary and his brother on $12,000 a year.

Despite his handicap and the loss of his father he is an honor student, a musician, and a leader in his class. He dreams of a career in astronomy and a future with NASA. Student benefits are the only way Gary's dream will come true.

And the worst part is that the Social Security Administration never bothered to tell Gary and most of the other students that the benefits they were counting on would not be there.

Imagine the surprise and shock of these students and their families when they learned through the media that the Reagan adminstration had no intention of honoring the commitments these families thought they had from their Government.

As late as last December, the Social Security Administration was still sending out thousands of brochures to this year's seniors informing them that they would continue to receive their benefits if they enrolled in college next year. Students all around the country made their plans on this advice.

The Department of Defense has yet to notify servicemen on active duty that these benefits will be cut off. When asked how long notification would take a spokesman for the Department indicated it could take 18 months to publish a new pamphlet.

In 1939, the Social Security Act was amended to provide benefits to dependent children until their 17th birthday if they were attending school full time. In 1946, the age was extended to 18. In 1965, the age was extended to 22. Members of the Ways and Means Committee and Senate Finance Committee argued then that a child over 18 attending school full time is just as dependent as one under 18. They pointed out that a child who cannot look to a father for support—because their father has died, is disabled, or is retired—is at a disadvantage in completing his education:

Not only may the child be prevented from going to college by loss of parental support and loss of his benefits; he may even be prevented from finishing high school or going to vocational school.

The arguments made in this body in 1965 are as valid today as they were then.

The Levin amendment will give these young people the time they need to plan their education.

I urge its adoption.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor of the amendment offered by my colleague from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN.

The Social Security Administration never properly informed student beneficiaries, parents, or guidance counselors of the change in the law. Furthermore, high school seniors received erroneous information by mail and by phone when they and their parents made inquiries to their local social security offices. In the absence of clear notification of changes in the law—changes that have a dramatic impact on the futures of youngsters depending on this benefit to help finance higher education—it is simply unfair to penalize students who have been misinformed by the Government.

Mr. President, nearly 84 percent of the students receiving benefits come from parents earning less than $20,000 annually. Many students could not attend college without this aid. Cuts in other forms of student aid coupled with the ambiguous information supplied by the Social Security Administration concerning the status of the student benefit have already jeopardized the higher education plans of many. These students deserve more consideration than has been provided in the inept way the notification of this change has been handled. About 80 percent of these students have one or both parents deceased or disabled. Many of these young people have no spokesperson to plead their case.

I commend Senator LEVIN for his persistence in bringing this issue to the Senate floor, and I urge my colleagues to join me in support for the Levin amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator LEVIN, in an effort to preserve for an additional year most of the social security student benefits for children of deceased and disabled workers and children of soldiers killed in Vietnam.

In New Jersey, as elsewhere, a large proportion of the students whose college assistance was taken away from them had no opportunity to avoid this loss solely because the Social Security Administration failed to provide timely information.

Last year's change in the law apparently did not filter down to local staff in the Social Security Administration until after thousands of old brochures detailing the old guidelines were sent out to recipients. The information those high school seniors received flatly told them they were eligible for student benefits if they went to college in the fall. Still more students and parents were given that same erroneous information over the telephone by local social security offices. And guidance counselors who were not on top of congressional action were not advised of the change in eligibility standards for assistance until it was too late to benefit most high school seniors.

A letter from a constituent from Pennsauken, N.J., to President Reagan illustrates the impact of that action in very personal terms. She wrote:

I have been a widow since 1972 and unemployed. I am now 60 years old. I have been raising 2 children on our Social Security benefits since the death of my husband with absolutely no help from anyone. The student benefits have helped to keep us together as a family in our own home. I feel that was the purpose of the survivor and student benefits because even welfare gets that benefit. Their benefit checks, they had turned over to me with their checks and mine. I would pay Mortgage, Utilities, Food, Medical, Blue Cross and Blue Shield, and so forth, and it has not been easy.

When my husband died, his Company dropped us from the Company Pension Program and medical plans, now our Government has dropped us. My husband worked over 36 years and payed Social Security taxes to protect his family. These cuts are depriving young people of an education, a home, family togetherness. While inflation is continuing to consume us.

My son has been an excellent student all through these years. He has always been an "A" Honor Roll Student. His teachers and guidance counsellors have said all along he is college material. My son will be 18 years old January 8, 1982, he will graduate from High School June 1982. We visited our Social Security Office, according to the new rules he will no longer be eligible for benefits once he graduates from High School. He would have had to start Post Secondary before May 1982. It's a shame because he only wanted 2 years of county college. We needed those student benefits to keep our home together while my son went to college.

My son was heavy into education and now cannot finish what he started out to do. He now will have to find full-time work to pay our household expenses to keep a home together for us. * * *

Never, since my husband's death have I been so full of fear and bitterness, so insecure, worrying all the time, depressed, so that now I cannot even function properly the way I used to, this has been since March 1981.

It is estimated that 250,000 to 300,000 high school graduated seniors would benefit from this amendment. Based on the 1981 data, over 60 percent of those are children of deceased workers. Seventy-one percent of the beneficiaries were from families with incomes of under $15,000; fifty-three percent of the students have family incomes under $8,000.

A letter from a mother from Rockaway, N.J., is typical of many hundreds I received last year. She wrote, in part:

Both of my children are recipients of survivors benefits. When my husband was alive we often discussed the children's education, and he would say "if anything happens to me you will have Social Security to help you through." Since he was only 36 years old when he died, we certainly did not have the time to save for our daughters' college education. Needless to say, with the high cost of college tuition and all of the other proposed college aid cuts, it would be impossible for my children to receive the education which they want and deserve. To me, this would be a betrayal of my husbands faith in the system to which he paid, as security for himself and his family.

I would like you to consider these young people, who have the capacity and potential of making a positive contribution to our society, when making your decision on how to vote. These people need your backing; don't close the doors of education to them.

While the cost of this amendment over a 3-year period is $245 million, the second half of the amendment would more than offset these costs. Currently, unnegotiated social security checks remain in the general fund. The Social Security Administration estimates that those uncashed checks add up to $255 million and each year $20 million more goes into that general pool. If those moneys were instead returned to the social security system the entire 3-year cost of this amendment would be more than offset. And the moneys would be put where they properly belong.

While the amendment does not go as far as I would like, it does rectify a severe hardship caused by lack of proper notice. It will change from May 1982 to October 1982 the date by which a student must be enrolled in a postsecondary educational institution in order to receive student benefits.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of Senator LEVIN's efforts today to address a situation which I believe is grossly unfair to many thousands of young people in this country. I, for one, have endorsed and will continue to endorse reasonable and appropriate efforts to restore the financial stability of the social security system, and recognize that this may require some painful decisions.

I cannot support, however, drastic, virtually unannounced reductions that render thousands of young Americans unable to obtain the education they are entitled to.

This is why I support my distinguished colleague from Michigan's amendment to restore social security student benefits to high school seniors who recently graduated and who, due to misinformation or no information at all, had no time to seek out alternate means of financing the education they had for so long hoped for.

It is important to note, Mr. President, that this amendment, which would extend the final enrollment deadline from May to October 1982 for students to continue receiving their benefits, would allow the administration's phaseout of social security benefits to continue as scheduled in the 1981 Reconciliation Act.

It would, however, allow up to 300,000 high school seniors, one-third of whom received outdated brochures about their benefits that SSA mistakenly sent out, to continue their education with the assistance they have been counting on.

Mr. President, all of us recognize the need to reduce spending in so many Federal programs which have grown beyond their original anticipated size.

But I cannot stand idly by when changes are proposed which are not only drastic in nature, but which are executed in an inexcusable manner.

Young people, children of deceased and disabled workers, children of soldiers killed in Vietnam, have been for years counting on survivor's benefits to aid them through college. Most of them were told only weeks before the deadline that they were being cut off from these benefits, and what occurred then was a hysterical scrambling by parents, high school counselors, and friends to enroll these children in any college that would take them before the May deadline.

That any legislative or governmental decision should cause such widespread panic is abhorrent.

I, therefore, wholeheartedly support my colleague from Michigan's unwavering commitment to the restoration of these benefits, and urge my colleagues to join him in this vital effort.●

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, changes enacted in the administration's budget-cutting bill last year eliminated social security student benefits for eligible young people who had not enrolled in a postsecondary educational institution by May of this year. The pending amendment would extend the cutoff deadline for 4 additional months, to October 1982.

This is an action the Congress should have taken before May's cutoff. All of us here can recall the tragic stories reported in the press last spring, as high school seniors missed their own graduations to enroll in college in order to recieve benefits. All of us here can remember the confusion that ensued when two of the six social security regional offices sent out benefit brochures by mistake, clearly telling students that their benefits would continue in full.

The Levin amendment is a compromise. Under its terms, student benefits would still be reduced by 25 precent, and phased out according to the provisions of last year's budget-cutting bill. However, the amendment would aid 250,000 to 300,000 high school graduated seniors in pursuing a higher education. Most of these young people are from lower income families. Last year, 71 percent of the young people aided under the program were from families with annual incomes below $15,000; 53 percent from families with yearly incomes below $8,000.

While funding for other Federal educational programs has been cut back, we must remember our commitment to our Nation's deceased workers and to our soldiers who never came back from Vietnam. We cannot unfairly desert their children.

The Levin amendment includes provisions to offset the amendment's cost to the social security system. I commend the Senator from Michigan for the many hours of work devoted to developing this legislation.

SOCIAL SECURITY STUDENT BENEFITS

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I am pleased to be able to join the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) as a cosponsor of this important amendment to retain social security student benefits for those students who have graduated from high school this past spring. Many of these students have had their education plans disrupted or derailed by the failure of the Social Security Administration to provide them with adequate information about changes in the 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act affecting their eligibility for future benefits. As many as 75,000 to 100,000 of these young people received erroneous information that they would continue to be eligible for benefits upon attending a postsecondary school when two regional social security offices sent out old, outdated brochures. Others received incorrect information when they called their local social security offices with questions about the student assistance program. Many students and their families received no information at all, and were shocked to later find out they would not be eligible for benefits when they enrolled in the fall.

A college education and how to finance it is something that a family plans over its lifetime, and cannot be altered in a matter of months. The phaseout of student benefits has caused disruption in education institutions and heartache in families, who are faced with the prospect of making life-determining decisions almost overnight. Many families pulled their children out of their last year of high school and enrolled them in college early in order to meet the May 1 deadline. Other families that had carefully and responsibly planned for their children's education discovered that a college education might not be possible.

I am deeply concerned about these problems confronting students and their families, and have long questioned the wisdom of terminating the social security student assistance program. The administration's justification for the termination of this program was that other student assistance programs were more appropriate in providing financial help to college students. Yet these other programs have been severely cut or terminated on the insistance of the administration in both the 1981 and 1982 budgets. Recipients of social security student benefits are among those students most in need of financial assistance, often coming from families with marginal incomes. Over 53 percent are from families with annual incomes over under $8,000. They are more likely than other students to hold full- or part-time jobs while attending college. And many receive very limited help from their families in paying the cost of attending college.

Our Nation has a commitment to providing quality education for all of our citizens. I opposed the termination of the social security student benefit program, as well as other cuts in education program, when they were before the Senate last year, and earlier this year joined with the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) in cosponsoring legislation to enable a partial restoration of this invaluable program. The amendment pending before the Senate would correct this serious inequity imposed on thousands of young people, and add to the ability of our Nation to insure an educated citizens. The amendment also requires that uncashed social security checks be recredited to the social security trust funds instead of to the general fund. These additional funds would insure that this partial restoration of student benefits would be at no additional cost to the social security trust funds. I commend my colleague from Michigan for offering this amendment, and urge my other colleagues to join in supporting it.

In order to illustrate the seriousness of the situation which is currently affecting students, their families, and educational institutions in Maryland, I ask that testimony presented by several Marylanders before the House of Representatives Committee on Education and Labor this past February be included in the RECORD.

The testimony follows:

STATEMENT OF ALICE JAMES, CHESTERTOWN, MD.

Mr. Chairman and members of the subcommittee, I am Alice James.

I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you to discuss the impact of the elimination of survivor benefits for college students. I shall read my testimony.

I teach in Chestertown, Md. English to the Kent School, and writing at Washington College, and am the widow of a scholar who taught at Washington College for 25 years. But it is not as an educator that I am here today; it is as the parent of four students aged 15 to 21. As a widowed parent I must convey to you the plight of not just my own children, but of thousands like them who may be unjustly deprived of the benefits their dead parents earned for them, the benefits which would enable them to contribute their talents and skills to our society.

Let me explain the impact of the cuts on my own family. My oldest child will graduate from college in May. Until recently she had expected to go on to graduate school, preparing herself for a career in teaching or a related field. As a result of the extraordinary stress the cuts will impose on our family, she is shelving her plans and looking for a job. I pray that she will find one. Her father earned his Ph. D. I have an M.A. You can imagine how I feel about this derailment of her professional goals.

My second child is in her second year of college; she too wants to be a teacher. In the next year her annual income from social security will be reduced 50 percent. This year she received 12 checks for $238. During her junior year she will receive eight checks for $178. Her financial planning was predicated on the continued availability of both social security benefits and guaranteed student loans. She is to lose $1,900 in social security, and perhaps $2,000 in loans. How shall we compensate for the loss of $3,900? Which of the other programs will cover our loss?

When she returned to college after Christmas she thought her funding would only be reduced by 25 percent of her annual total. I am ashamed to admit that although I have talked to her since this document arrived on Wednesday, January 27, I have not told her the enormity of her loss. We talked on her 20th birthday. She told me that she missed her father, that she needed him to give her a hug and say, "Your old man is proud of you." Which of you could have delivered another blow? What do you think I should say to her now?

My son is 17. He would be a senior in high school but for a back injury sustained in the spring of his sophomore year. It was misdiagnosed and mistreated for 4 weeks. Finally, he was hospitalized. After another week of painful testing and anxiety, the doctor discovered that their 15-year-old patient had ruptured a disc in his lower back. Summer study was not possible because of lingering pain and the distracting discomfort of a heavy brace. He needed to repeat his sophomore year. Consequently he is not among the high school seniors scrambling to enroll in college program before May 1.

Extend the deadline. Do all you can to help the multitude of youngsters who cannot help themselves. But even if the deadline is extended to June 1, my boy will be deprived of social security benefits for his college education. On the PSAT he scored in the 94 percentile. Which of you wants to tell him that his education is jeopardized by these cuts?

I must add this his hero is the late David K. E. Bruce, envoy to China, ambassador to many European countries, negotiator at the Paris peace talks. He wants to emulate that distinguished career of service to this country. Which of you wants to tell him that his country does not need his services?

And now my youngest daughter, at 15 an enthusiastic sophomore in a stiff college preparatory program. I worry that she will lose her motivation to excel. On the one hand, she knows that her father and I would want her to work as hard as she could to go on to the best college that would take her; on the other hand, she sees what the financial stress is doing to me. What can I do to assure her that somehow we will find a way for her to pursue a career in architecture?

There are thousands of children like mine around the country. There are students who are asking for the benefits their dead parents earned for them. They are asking for help with their education in order that they may contribute to society, not become a drain on it. I wish their mothers could join me here, for I am a weak spokesman for a group of citizens with so few votes. I wish these students themselves could march on Washington and demonstrate outside your doors. But the administration has picked on a silent minority devoid of political clout.

Must I remind you that the GI bill and other educational programs have proved that they are a wise investment that pays dividends through the increased productivity and wage-earning capacity of the recipient?

Must I remind you that responsible parents like my husband took the social security program into consideration when they examined their life insurance coverage? And just as they expected their insurance companies to honor their commitment to a prearranged program, so too they expected the Government of their country to honor its commitment. Because my husband and his employer were compelled to contribute to the social security program, he could not afford the additional life insurance that would otherwise compensate us for the loss of social security coverage.

Congress has robbed these children of the educational opportunities their parents earned for them. It has also robbed them of faith in their Government. I beg of you—restore their funding; restore their faith in their country.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. HOKE L. SMITH, PRESIDENT, TOWSON STATE UNIVERSITY, TOWSON, MD.

My name is Hoke Smith; I am President of Towson State University in Towson, Maryland. Towson is a public comprehensive university enrolling approximately 15,000 students.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to present my views concerning the recently mandated cuts in social security benefits for students attending institutions of higher education. To provide continued access for these students typifies the serious problem which confronts the higher educational system and which seriously threatens the twin goals of accesss and choice which we as a society have worked long to establish. Although my institution is less dependent upon federally-funded financial aid than most other institutions in our state, both our students and the institution itself will be seriously damaged by cuts in their social security benefits.

This year we have approximately 370 students receiving social security benefits. Of these approximately thirty percent receive some other type of federal aid. In addition, we made 1683 Pell Grants, 194 College Work-Study Grants, 706 NDSL Loans, 557 SEOG Grants, and 2200 GSL/FISL Loans. With the exception of College Work-Study and NDSL Loans, all of these were slightly smaller than the preceding year. In the view of our Director of Financial Aid, we did not have adequate funds in relation to the need in any of these programs and had a great deal less than needed in College Work-Study and SEOG.

We estimate that approximately 100 new students would attend Towson State University utilizing social security benefits in the coming year. As a result of publicity in or area, approximately 17 high school students have already enrolled this semester under our early admissions policy in anticipation of social security cuts. Depending upon the economic needs of the balance of the incoming students, we obviously are not in a position to supplement or replace these cuts by other federally-funded financial aid programs. A 25 percent cut in Pell funds would affect 420 students; 25 percent in CWS would affect 48; 35 percent in new NDSL funds would affect 247; while a cut of 42 percent in SEOG funds would affect 233 students.

In summary, the social security cuts coupled with other projected cuts in financial aid may affect slightly over 1,000 students. At this point, I cannot say whether this would keep these students from attending college. I can tell this committee that I am anticipating that we will have approximately 400 fewer students on campus due to cuts in financial aid.

Current federal policy is threatening the concept of access to higher education which has been developed since World War II. It is truly a counter-revolution which affects the educational and research basis of our nation's economy. It seems to me counter-productive to advocate economic development while wiping out the technological and education base which we have seen undergirds our technological and democratic society. Not only does higher education foster economic competence, but it also fosters support of the democratic ideals. I think that the works of Howard R. Bowen and Alexander Astin have demonstrated these accomplishments.

I wish to add a few words, as a parent of a high school senior. I have attempted to plan for the education of my children. My last one is graduating from high school this year. As a part of that planning, I have combined insurance with the coverage offered through the social security program. If I were to die now, the portion of my son's education which I had planned to have paid by social security would not be available to him. In other words, the government has without any warning changed the basis upon which I, and I believe other prudent citizens, have planned their lives. It has done so without offering any opportunity for adjustment of personal financial plans. Personally, I can adjust by taking extra insurance, if I am still insurable, or by some other means. However, if I were dead, it would not be possible.

I believe that one of the highest values in all of culture is the promise made by the living to the dead to care for their children and to see that they are raised to a position of adulthood in society. This is what we collectively have covenanted with each other through the social security program. Now, the federal government unilaterally, suddenly, and without any apparent concern for the violation of this covenant, has broken this collective promise to those who have died. Their children will no longer receive the support which was promised. And the parents obviously are in no position to do anything about it.

I believe that this action mocks the rhetoric of a return to traditional American values. It violates our political contract for the mutual benefit of society and the maintenance of domestic security and tranquility. It provides little assurance that our government will abide by its promises to its citizens—promises upon which they plan their lives. If our government violates its contract in this way, what assurance do we have that it will honor its commitments for disability payments under social security, or, indeed, that social security, which is built in as as essential element of many pension plans, will fulfill its promises.

Therefore, I recommend this committee give serious consideration to attempting to influence the form which the cut off of social security takes. I say this as a parent and as a citizen, not as a college president. I would suggest that instead of cutting off benefits for dependents entering institutions this year, the eligibility for benefits instead be geared to the time of the death of the covered individual. If this were to be made effective next January, it would mean that we would not achieve the instant cuts in social security which this approach will accomplish but that eventually we will have eliminated this drain on the budget. But more important, we will have kept faith with our fellow citizens.

If in view of the extreme financial problems facing the federal government it is deemed that this cannot be done, I would suggest that a low interest loan fund be created to equal the amounts which recipients would have otherwise achieved. This will have a long-term effect of not increasing the national debt significantly while honoring the commitment to provide financial support for these students.

I recognize, along with many of my fellow citizens, that steps must be taken to minimize and control federal expenditures. Perhaps from an institutional viewpoint, social security is not as effective as the basic opportunity grants or other need-based programs.

However, as I thought about this problem, I became convinced that, as important as access to education is, it is of secondary importance to that of honoring our national commitment to our people in the event of the death of a supporting parent, for this commitment was made to those who no longer can take any action of protest or repudiation of our promise.

STATEMENT OF JACQUELINE ARRINGTON, STUDENT, TOWSON STATE UNIVERSITY

I expected to receive social security throughout my college education. My father expected it before he died. He paid into it like many men and women today and expected his daughter to be able to continue her education.

Instead of receiving social security I thought I could get the basic opportunity grant. But now that seems to be getting cut. So I am just going to have to find a job during the winter which I don't want to do because I did it last winter and my grades fell. I really think that I want to direct myself totally to my education.

I discussed the whole situation with my mom, who I live with, and she is going to have to find some extra work somewhere or work overtime at her job.

I just feel it is totally unfair to a student whose parents died and the parents that died who expected their children to be taken care of by the Government, I don't know how I am going to be able to continue school. It is going to be hard because I am going to have to cut a lot of expenses.

As was said previously, I did not receive any notification. I did not know about the cuts until last month. A news reporter called me and informed me. I heard bits and pieces from different people and I thought I should have been notified before so I could have made plans to try to save a little bit more or put a little more away for college for my education, for books and so forth.

I also feel that it should be reexamined so students can continue school.

I just want to say that thank goodness I live with my mother. For the students that don't live with parents they cannot continue school and I just hope they find other ways to do it.

PREPARED STATEMENT PRESENTED BY HERM DAVIS, DIRECTOR OF FINANCIAL AID, MONTGOMERY COLLEGE, MONTGOMERY COUNTY, MD.

Mr. Chairman and members of the subcommittee, I appreciate this opportunity to present the views of the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges (AACJC) regarding the payment of Social Security benefits to students attending postsecondary institutions. I am Herm Davis, Director of Financial Aid at Montgomery College in Montgomery County, Maryland.

This testimony is submitted regarding the cancellation of social security benefits for individuals who would normally receive these benefits as college students beginning in the fall of 1982. It is restricted to discussing the limited information and the communication process that the Social Security Administration failed to use.

As you are aware, we are addressing the college educational needs of over 100,000 students who are now completing their senior year in high school. As of this date, unless these students were nearing their 18th birthday, they have not been notified officially regarding the status of the elimination of their benefits. As a matter of fact, there have been no bulletins submitted to high school counselors or college representatives regarding this problem. For example, at Montgomery College the only official documentation we have received is one that we requested that turned out to be a Social Security Administration paper dated November, 1981 that we received in the middle of December. This document clarifies the issue but the question remains, why was a document of this nature not submitted earlier to the 100,000 plus students that its instructions ultimately affect? This is the main question being asked by students as well as their parents. They feel that there was only limited time to react to the elimination of Social Security benifits and this time was not used to promptly and properly notify them.

Inquiries were made at regional offices of the Social Security Administration to ascertain when notifications to the students and their parents would be sent. The response that we received indicated the students would be notified by the middle of late February of the new guidelines and restrictions. Because of this a large number of these students will not only lose their Social Security benefits, it will be too late for them to apply for institutional and state aid programs.

College officials throughout the United States have been besieged with inquiries regarding the loss of benefits. Unfortunately, the few press releases that were printed stated that students "enrolled" in college by May 1982 would be eligible for Social Security benefits for the fall of 1982. "Enrolled" was interpreted by many people to mean "admitted" to an institution but not necessarily in attendance by May 1. The meaning of the word "enrolled", has created problems for the colleges and students because Social Security officials are now interpreting this to mean "admitted and in full-time attendance." It is probable that many high school students are still making plans with this incorrect definition in mind.

To complicate the problem further, some high school recipients of Social Security benefits who will start college classes in the fall of 1982 believe they are automatically eligible to attend college and receive Social Security benefits because they will not be 18 until after the fall term begins.

To help resolve these issues in a fair and equitable manner to students and their parents who have invested in Social Security, and through no fault of their own are losing this important benefit, it is the recommendation of the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges that the May 1982 deadline be moved back to September 30, 1982 and that the Social Security Administration be instructed to notify all eligible students and their parents immediately.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to testify before this Subcommittee.●

FAIR PLAY FOR SOCIAL SECURITY ACT OF 1982

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, on June 17, 1982, I introduced S. 2638, which I termed the Fair Play for Social Security Act of 1982. The purpose of that bill was to require that the social security trust funds be reimbursed from the general funds of the Treasury the amount which the social security trust funds have been shortchanged since January 1, 1970, because such trust funds have been invested in Government securities which have provided a lesser rate of return than was available on other Government securities.

In the statement which I made in connection with the introduction of S. 2638, I said that I made no charge of wrongdoing or malfeasance but asserted that it appeared there was a custom or practice of investing social security trust funds in Government securities with a lesser yield than was otherwise available. I stated that this reduced the interest paid by the general fund and thereby unjustly enriched the general fund at the expense of the social security trust funds and social security beneficiaries.

I stated at the time that I could not fix the exact amount involved but that it was literally in the billions. I also told the Senate that at my request the General Accounting Office was working on this problem for the purpose of determining the amount of interest earned by the trust funds and the amount of interest which could have been earned if the trust funds were invested in other Government securities. I have now received a report from the General Accounting Office on this matter and am taking this opportunity to share it with the Senate.

I should make it clear at the outset that the action of the General Accounting Office was to make an effort to estimate what might have happened to social security trust funds under different investment policies. Specifically the General Accounting Office advised me that the data which it furnished was a "ball park" estimate of how much additional interest the trust funds would have earned over the past 12 years—1970-81—if the assets had been invested in short-term yields—6-month securities and 3-year securities—rather than under the actual investment practices.

The calculations of the General Accounting Office which they furnished me showed that at the end of fiscal year 1981 the combined old age and survivors insurance and disability insurance trust funds could have been about $4.8 billion higher and the hospital insurance trust fund about $1 billion higher under the 3-year investment policy. This means that for the combined old age and survivors insurance, disability insurance, and hospital insurance trust funds there could have been an increase of $5.8 billion if the money had been invested in 3-year securities.

The General Accounting Office calculations also show that, if the trust funds had been invested in 6-month securities, the combined old age and survivors insurance and the disability insurance trust funds could have been about $3.6 billion higher, and the hospital insurance trust fund for the same period could have been $1.6 billion higher. This is a difference for the three funds combined of $5.2 billion.

I ask that the report of the General Accounting Office, together with the covering letter and the tables attached thereto, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I have mentioned this before but I want to point out again that in a hearing held by the Subcommittee on Social Security of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives last October information was furnished by the Treasury Department relative to the additional interest income to the old age and survivors insurance and disability insurance trust funds under a revised investment policy. As I pointed out in my floor statement of June 17, 1982, this Treasury estimate showed that, if during the 1960-80 period the special issues held by the trust funds on June 30 of each year that carried an interest rate lower than the interest rate for the new issues in June had been reinvested or rolled over in special issues carrying the newer and higher rate, the assets of the old age and survivors insurance and disability insurance trust funds would have been increased by about $13.5 billion. I emphasize again, as I did on June 17, that this estimate does not include any possible increase in the hospital insurance trust fund.

I do not want to belabor the question, Mr. President, but the facts which I have laid out show conclusively that the social security trust funds were shortchanged by a minimum of $5.2 billion because such trust funds were invested in Government securities providing a lesser rate of return than was otherwise available on Government securities. This was a loss to the trust funds and a gain for the general fund of the U.S. Treasury.

I point out again, Mr. President, that these trust funds are dedicated for the payment of social security benefits. Those who hold and invest them act in a fiduciary relationship of the highest nature. It is therefore essential, in my judgment, that the funds be invested in Government securities that will earn the maximum return commensurate with the safety of the investment. This has not been done in the past and I am of the opinion that this has unjustly enriched the general fund of the Treasury at the expense of the social security trust funds.

If S. 2638 is enacted into law an injustice will be corrected by requiring that the social security trust funds be reimbursed for the difference in the interest actually earned and that which could have been earned by investing the trust funds in other Government securities. It would be a significant step in restoring and maintaining the solvency of the social security trust funds.

In closing, I want to urge that the Senate Committee on Finance, to which S. 2638 has been referred, give careful consideration to this matter and schedule hearings for the purpose of inquiring into it. If such hearings are held I would hope that appropriate legislation would be reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter addressed to me from the U.S. General Accounting Office, dated August 6, 1982, with enclosures, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., August 6, 1982.

HON. JOHN C. STENNIS,
U.S. Senate

DEAR SENATOR STENNIS: Pursuant to your request we are providing the enclosed Statement of Facts which discusses our efforts to estimate what might have happened to the Social Security trust funds under different investment policies. The data show a "ball park" estimate of how much additional interest the trust funds could have earned over the past 12 years (1970-1981) if the assets had been invested in short-term yields (6-month securities and 3-year securities) rather than under the current investment practice.

Our calculations show that at the end of fiscal year 1981 the combined Old-Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability Insurance trust funds could have been about $3.6 billion higher under the 6-month investment policy and $4.8 billion higher under the 3-year investment policy. The Hospital Insurance trust fund for the same period could have been $1.6 billion higher under the 6-month investment policy and about $1.0 billion higher under the 3-year investment policy.

Our Institute for Program Evaluation designed the methodology and performed the calculations. Because of the frequency of the daily investment activities we applied actuarial techniques. Also, as discussed with your office we made certain assumptions relating to investment practices. However, we believe the data give a reasonable picture of what could have happened. The data do not show what the effect of future changes in the investment policy would be because future interest rate differentials could be very different from past differentials.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD A. DENSMORE
(For Gregory J. Ahart, Director).

Enclosure.

STATEMENT OF FACTS—INVESTMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ASSETS IN SHORT TERM GOVERNMENT SECURITIES

Under the Social Security Act, amounts in the social security trust funds not needed to meet current benefit payments and administrative expenses may be invested in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States. The Act authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue special, non-marketable public debt obligations to the trust funds and provides that the funds be invested in these special non-marketable issues unless the public interest indicates otherwise. Under a 1960 amendment, these special obligations bear interest determined by a statutory formula which seeks to approximate the interest rates the Treasury would pay in the market for borrowing for a period of four or more years.

Since 1960, the investment policy has been to invest daily trust fund receipts in special non-market Treasury obligations which mature on the upcoming June 30. On June 30, these maturing securities are redeemed and reinvested in longer term securities. The maturities of these longer term investments are determined by the projected cash needs of the funds.

The criticism has, at times, been levied that the Social Security trust funds should be invested in short-term Government obligations, rather than long-term ones. This paper provides "ball park" estimates of how much the trust funds could have earned over the past 12 years (1970–1981) if assets had been invested at short-term yields (6-month securities and 3-year securities) rather than under the current investment policy. Certain guidelines, assumptions, and data sources were used in developing the estimates. (See app. I.)

The estimates show what might have happended under different investment policies. Because of the frequency of transactions short cuts were taken (i.e., we did not attempt to show what the day-to-day results would have been). However, we believe the data give a reasonable picture of what could have happened. (See app. II.)

The data do not show what the effect of future changes in the investigation policy would be because future interest rate differentials could be very different from past differentials.

In the 1970's the yield of the 6-month securities fluctuated and sometimes was less than the yield of the actual investments of the three trust funds. As a result, the assets of the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance (OASI) and Disability Insurance (DI) funds would have been lower at the end of several fiscal years under short-term investment than under actual investment policy. (See app. II—Tables 1 and 2.) However, the yields started to increase rapidly in the late 1970's and early 1980's. By the end of fiscal year 1981, under this investment policy the OASI fund could have been $2.8 billion higher, and the DI fund $0.8 billion higher, than under the present policy.

Using 3-year investments, the assets would have been higher for both funds at the end of each year for the period under consideration. Assets could have been $3.7 billion higher for the OASI fund and $1.1 billion higher for the DI fund at the end of fiscal year 1981.

At the end of fiscal year 1981, the combined OASDI [1] trust funds (see app. II–Table 3) could have been $3.6 billion higher under the 6-month investment policy and $4.8 billion higher under the 3-year investment policy.

The same assumptions were applied to the Hospital Insurance (HI) trust fund. (See app. II—Table 4.) Investing in 6-month securities, the annual trust fund balances would have been slightly less than the actual balances until the end of fiscal year 1978, since the average yields of the actual investments wee slightly higher. Beginning in 1979, short-term interest rates increased repidly. By the end of fiscal year 1981, the balance in the HI fund could have been $1.6 billion higher than the actual balance.

If the assets of the HI fund had been invested in 3-year securities, the end-of-fiscal-year balances would have been slightly larger than actual balances for every year during the period under consideration. At the end of fiscal year 1981, the balance could have been about $1.0 billion over the actual balance.

The results for the OASDI and HI funds differ slightly, probably because the OASDI funds declined substantially between 1970 and 1981 while the HI fund increased over the same period. However, it can be seen for all three funds that investing in short-term securities under the stated assumptions would have resulted in higher trust fund balances at the end of fiscal year 1981.

Tables 5 and 6 of app. II show that the investment income under the two hypothetical investment policies would have been higher for all years (except for some of the early years, when investing in 6-month securities) than under the present policy.

Table 7 of app. II shows the average yield rates on 6-month and 3-year U.S. Government securities for the periods under consideration.

APPENDIX I—APPROACH, ASSUMPTIONS, AND DATA SOURCES USED IN PREPARING CALCULATIONS

Data were developed based on investing in two separate types of short-term Government securities (6-month securities and 3-year securities).

Daily income into the funds from tax receipts or other sources continued to be invested in "certificates of indebtedness".

Starting with 1970, special issue bonds were converted to short-term securities only if the short-term yield was greater than the special issue yield.

Benefits were paid from certificates of indebtedness first, then from the redemption of the short-term securities as necessary.

The assets of each fund invested in special issues on June 30, 1970, were rolled over into 6-month and 3-year securities respectively, if the yield was greater than the special issue yield. Otherwise they were invested at a later date.

Investments not in special issues were rolled over on their maturity date.

Interest earned every six months was also invested, unless needed for benefit payments.

Assets invested at the 6-month or 3-year rates could be redeemed only on the maturity date. Therefore, enough funds were assumed to have been kept in cash or certificates of indebtedness (earning interest on a short-term basis) to meet monthly benefit payments and other expenses.

Whenever income exceeded outgo substantially, the excess was invested. Conversely, when outgo exceeded income, securities were redeemed.

The following information was obtained from the Department of the Treasury and the Social Security Administration:

1. Monthly statements showing income outgo, investments, and balances of the trust funds from 1970 up to September 30, 1981.

2. Annual yields for 6-month and 3-year Government securities for each month from 1970 to 1981.

From: Harry C. Ballantyne.

Subject: Additional Interest Income to the OASI and DI Trust Funds Under a Revised Investment Policy.

We have determined the amount of additional interest income that would have been received by the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability Insurance Trust Funds during 1960–80 if the policies and procedures governing the investments of the trust funds had been changed as described below.

Under the revised policies and procedures, the special issues held by the trust funds on June 30 of each year, that carry an interest rate which is lower than the interest rate for new issues in June, would be reinvested (or rolled over) in special issues carrying the new issue rate for June, but with no change in the maturity date. If this revised procedure had been in effect since June 30, 1960, the assets of the OASI and DI Trust Funds would have been increased by the amounts shown in the following table:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, time for morning business will expire, under the present order, in 3 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 15 minutes under the same terms as previously stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR CERTAIN ACTIONS DURING ADJOURNMENT AND ORDER OF PROCEDURE ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1982

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is an adjournment resolution at the desk. I would shortly like to ask the Senate to consider it. First, I wish to put a unanimous-consent request for the consideration of the minority leader and all the Members.

I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment of the Senate until Wednesday, September 8, messages from the President of the United States and the House of Representatives may be received by the Secretary of the Senate and appropriately referred; and that the Vice President, the President pro tempore, and the acting President pro tempore may be authorized to sign duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions.

I further ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment of the Senate until Wednesday, September 8, committees may be authorized to file reports on September 3 between the hours of 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes on Wednesday, September 8, the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and following the time allocated to the two leaders under the standing order, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to exceed 30 minutes in length, with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, would the distinguished majority leader change the routine morning business request to 1 hour instead of 30 minutes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am pleased to amend the request to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object, this request has to do, in part, with messages from the President of the United States. I ask this question in the spirit in which I know the majority leader will not misunderstand.

I wonder if the majority leader can tell us anything further with regard to the possibility of a veto message from the President of the United States anent the supplemental appropriations conference report that we just voted on by voice to day.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader.

I regret to say that I cannot give the minority leader any more information than I could earlier. It is my impression that the President has not made a decision on what disposition he will make of this measure now that it has been adopted by the Senate for transmission to him for his consideration.

That is not to say he has not decided. It does mean he has not told me nor, I believe, has he indicated to anyone else—perhaps his own staff, but I doubt that—what he intends to do.

I do not know is the simple answer. I have made a recommendation to the President. I have no idea what he will do. My inclination is to think that the President will either sign or veto the bill. I do not expect that he will exercise a pocket veto. Since we are out of session for 10 days, that might be a possible choice, but I do not think that likely.

Mr. President, all I can say is that I do not believe the President would call us back into session. I do believe that were he to veto the bill, urgent matters that must be attended to by the Government could be attended to until we return.

The only new piece of information I can add to that which I gave to the minority leader this morning is that I have now talked to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, I believe, also does not know what the President intends to do. He indicated that in the event there were a veto—he does not predict that, but if there were a veto, he is convinced that temporary and interim measures could be undertaken on an emergency basis to provide for the needs of the Government until he returns.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. So the majority leader does not believe a veto of this measure would put the Congress is a position where it could be criticized for being out for the length of time which is set forth in the adjournment resolution.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I believe not. I think that the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I have asked him to reduce to writing in a letter to me, helps alleviate my fears, at least, in that respect.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I have one further question. I know that many Senators on the majority side of the aisle walked the plank on the Caribbean Basin provisions that are in this bill. The President very much supported those provisions. I suppose the question answers itself. Those same Caribbean Basin provisions in this piece of legislation for which the President fought and which he supported and for which many Senators on the majority leader's side of the aisle—as a matter of fact, most of them—voted, are in this legislation, are they not?

Mr. BAKER. Indeed they are, Mr. President. I am sure that must be a matter that the President will take account of as he considers this matter.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for his usual courtesy and indulgence. I have no objection to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANFORTH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

ADJOURNMENT OF HOUSE AND SENATE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 399.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1257

(Purpose: To provide for the adjournment of the House of Representatives on Friday, August 20, 1982)

Strike "when the House adjourns on Thursday, August 19" and insert "when the House adjourns on Friday, August 20".

Amend the title so as to read "Providing for an adjournment of the two Houses for more than three days".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I may say for the benefit of Senators that I discussed this matter with the leadership of the House. This accords with their wishes on how this matter would be dealt with procedurally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (UP No. 1257) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 399), as amended, was agreed to as follows:

Amend the title so as to read:

Providing for an adjournment of the two Houses for more than three days.

Mr. BAKER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there are a number of items on the calendar on my side of the aisle that are available for unanimous consent. I invite the attention of the minority leader to those nominations beginning on page 4, under "New Reports," through page 5, and inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to consider those items.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection on this side of the aisle.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session for the purpose of considering those nominations at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations I referred to be considered en bloc.

NOMINATION OF EVERETT ALVAREZ, JR., TO BE DEPUTY ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to report that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs has completed its consideration of the qualifications of Everett Alvarez, Jr., the President's nominee to be Deputy Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and the committee, by unanimous vote, recommends that the nomination be confirmed.

The position of Deputy Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is a most important assignment—especially at this time in the history of the Veterans' Administration. The Deputy Administrator is a vital part of the leadership team for the VA. The Deputy will be working with the Administrator in carrying out the many responsibilities of the agency which serves over 30 million living veterans through 172 medical centers, 226 outpatient clinics, 96 nursing home care units, and 58 regional offices. The Veterans' Administration operates the National Cemetery System and the Nation's largest medical system.

On July 1, 1982, President Reagan announced his intention to nominate

Everett Alvarez, Jr., to succeed Charles T. Hagle as Deputy Administrator for Veterans' Affairs. The nomination was made on July 26, 1982, and on that date, the nomination was referred to the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Since July 27, 1981, Mr. Alvarez has been serving as Deputy Director of the Peace Corps. So, twice within approximately a year, this nominee has gone through the process of confirmation.

Everett Alvarez is a Vietnam combat veteran. He was a Navy pilot from 1967 to 1973. For 8½ years he was held prisoner in and around Hanoi, and was the longest held prisoner of war in North Vietnam. The former Navy pilot received his bachelor's degree in electrical engineering from the University of Santa Clara in California in 1960. From college he entered the Navy where he served for 20 years. He received his master's degree in operations research and systems analysis in 1976 and in December of this year will be receiving a J.D. degree from George Washington University National Law Center.

From November 1976 to July 1980, Alvarez served as assistant program manager for the U.S. Naval Air Production Management Project Office in Washington, D.C., where he managed the Navy's $200 million A-4 aircraft program, accounting for the management of development, testing, evaluation, and production of A-4 systems.

Mr. Alvarez was appointed as the Deputy Director of the Peace Corps in April 1981. As Deputy Director he managed the day-to-day business of the Peace Corps, an agency with more 5,000 volunteers serving in more than 60 countries of the world.

Mr. President, it is the view of members of our Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs that Everett Alvarez, Jr. will perform the tasks assigned to him by the VA Administrator with skill, competence, and dependability, and that he will continue to unselfishly serve the people of the Nation just as he has in the past in the many responsibilities he has undertaken. I am impressed by him. I urge the Senate to support and likewise cast a fine vote on Mr. Alvarez—just as the Committee on Veterans' Affairs did in confirming this nomination.

At our committee's public hearing on August 5, 1982, Everett Alvarez was introduced to the committee by California's two Senators—CRANSTON and HAYAKAWA and by Senator DENTON of Alabama, who was a prisoner of war in North Vietnam with the nominee. I want to share with all of my colleagues Senator DENTON's introductory remarks. Following his remarks, I stated that in my 3½ years in the Senate, I had not heard a more beautiful statement made on anyone's behalf in any forum. Here is the truly remarkable introduction for Everett Alvarez, Jr.'s nomination to be Deputy Director of the VA as delivered by our fine colleague, Senator JEREMIAH DENTON of Alabama:

The statement referred to follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR DENTON

I believe my friend and brother on my right here is as sensitive as I that there has been perhaps too much said about Vietnam P.O.W.'s as opposed to other Vietnam veterans about whom not enough was said, not enough credit was given, and to veterans in general.

But this is a very special day for a special man and rather than go over what has been appropriately presented in introduction of this special man, I would like to say something special to Ev in a special way, which means "Happy Anniversary".

That is today, the 5th of August 1982 is the 18th anniversary of Ev having been shot down in 1964. And every morning in the camps in which we happened to be serving at the time, if someone had an anniversary, we all knew what date he was shot down and we would give that H.A. as an abbreviation to him and followed by his initials.

So it is kind of a dream that we never would have even dreamed, Ev, that I would be wishing you a happy anniversary in such happy circumstances.

Ev was flying an A-4 off the U.S.S. Constellation on a fateful day in U.S. history and therefore he should and will go down in history, perhaps more than any of us who are here extrolling his merits today.

The United States had just responded to the Tonkin Gulf incidents and President Johnson had ordered the launching of a retaliatory strike, and Ev was shot down on an attack on Hun Gay on that date of 5th of August.

Many of us have a long time alone. I happened to be the first person to get four years in solitary confinement, but my solitary confinement was somewhat ameliorated by the fact that occasionally I would be able to communicate with someone by tapping or other means.

Ev Alvarez was in North Vietnam alone at the military prison. There was no other American in the entire country with whom he could have possibly been in contact from 5 August 1964 until February 1965, when Bob Shoemaker happened to be shot down, who is still here also performing very well.

He has now been made a commodore in the Navy and I know that Ev and Bob and I would all like to be known by what we did before we were prisoners and after we were prisoners, rather than that which we just happen to be, because I know the chairman of the subcommittee or this committee would have been at least as staunch and certainly as much of a source of good morale to his comrades were he to have been there, and that is entirely true, and that applies to any other good American.

Ev was all alone. He in his loneliness would write messages, which I later saw as the 13th prisoner shot down in North Vietnam when I was introduced to little courtyards, perhaps half as big as this room where he had been permitted occasionally to exercise, and it is quite touching to read what he had left on the walls.

Let's see, he was shot down in August. He would have had certainly "Happy Thanksgiving Day" written on the walls just in case someone else would see it. There was no one to see it. You didn't know but there was no one there.

I don't know whether I can say this without emotion, but he had written in one place "Lord, I am not worthy, but only say the word, and my soul shall be healed."

A great many of us who were not particularly pious came to such thoughts very deeply during the years that we were there. I am sure none of us more deeply than Ev who was there longer than the rest.

He wrote "Merry Christmas". There was no one there. So when I saw those things and realized from the dates who had to have written them, I had been there a few months so I knew Ev was there, and I knew he had been there from reading about it in the newspapers and hearing about it in the P.O.W. school. It was quite touching, and I was extemely moved.

Later I got direct contact with Ev and learned that, from him and from his captors, that he had held up alone against the bombardment of propaganda, and at that time psychological pressure, then he held up extremely well under the torture which they began to apply in October 1965 and continued until October 1969. That is why he got many of those decorations.

He participated in the Hanoi March, which some day when we look back upon the Vietnam War with a bit more objectivity, I think it will be an event which goes down in American history.

They wanted to disgrace Americans in front of their citizens who they had dashed to fanaticism and hatred by propaganda reports for the past two weeks of how we ate little children for breakfast and destroyed old women for entertainment with our bombs and Ev participated in that March with great honor and courage, holding his head up despite being beaten as he marched through the streets of Hanoi.

I have the utmost respect for him from those days and affection.

Since those days he has shown, unlike the man about whom I had heard in the movie, I didn't see the movie, but I heard the man went nuts because he was in jail for eight years and it finally got to him. He kept saying "eight years, eight years, eight years" of things that he had missed. Well, Ev missed eight years. Came back, went to work, got those degrees you heard about and made those achievements that you have heard about and I can't think of a man who has more demonstrated patriotism, compassion, effectiveness, understanding of what it means to be an American, a man who will appreciate veterans more, a man who will deal with them with the understanding and appreciation which the chairman of this committee—with which he has dealt.

So, with those words, I wish to register for the Record and for my colleagues my welcome to Everett Alvarez.

God bless you.●

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Such facility shall be financially integrated with the Western Division, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program power system and the power marketed under rate schedules in effect for such system.

SEC. 105. The interest rate used for computing interest during construction and interest on the unpaid balance of the reimbursable costs of the Buffalo Bill Dam and Reservoir modifications shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, as of the beginning of the fiscal year in which construction of the unit is commenced, on the basis of the computed average interest rate payable by the Treasury upon its outstanding marketable public obligations which are neither due nor callable for fifteen years from date of issue.

SEC. 106. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated beginning October 1, 1982, for construction of the Buffalo Bill Dam and Reservoir modifications the sum of $106,700,000 (October 1982 price levels) plus or minus such amounts, if any, as may be required by reason of ordinary fluctuations in construction costs as indicated by engineering cost indexes applicable to the types of construction involved herein and, in addition thereto, such sums as may be required for operation, maintenance, and replacement of the works of said modifications: Provided, That, such sums authorized to be appropriated for construction, operation, maintenance, and replacement shall be reduced by the amounts contributed to the project under the provisions of section 7 of this Act.

(b) There is also authorized to be appropriated beginning October 1, 1982, such sums as may be required by the Secretary of Energy to accomplish interconnection of the powerplant authorized by this Act, together with such sums as may be required for operation and maintenance of the works authorized by section 104(a).

SEC. 107. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contracts with the State of Wyoming, upon such terms and conditions as he deems necessary, for the division of additional water impounded by the modifications, the sharing of revenues from the modifications, and the sharing of the costs of construction, operation, maintenance, and replacement of the Buffalo Bill Dam and Reservoir modifications.

TITLE II

That this Act shall amend and supplement the Act of June 17, 1902, and Acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof (43 U.S.C. 371), hereinafter referred to as the "Federal reclamation law".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 201. As used in this Act—

(a) The term "district" means any individual or any legal entity established under State law which has entered into a contract or is eligible to contract with the Secretary for irrigation water.

(b) The term "full cost" means an annual rate as determined by the Secretary that shall amortize the construction costs properly allocable to irrigation facilities in service, plus all operations and maintenance deficits funded, less payments, over such periods as may be required under reclamation law or applicable contract provisions, with interest on both accruing from the date of enactment on costs outstanding at that date, or from the date incurred in the case of costs arising subsequent to the date of enactment. The interest rate used pursuant to this Act shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury on the basis of the arithmetic average of (1) the computed average interest rate payable by the Treasury upon its marketable public obligations which are neither due nor callable for redemption for fifteen years from the date of issuance; and (2) the weighted average of market yields on all new, publicly held, interest-bearing, marketable issues sold during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which the expenditures are made or the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later: Provided, That normal operation, maintenance, and replacement charges will be collected in addition to the full cost charge.

(c) The term "individual" means any natural person, including his or her spouse, and including other dependents thereof within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 152).

(d) The term "irrigation water" means water made available for agricultural purposes from the operation of reclamation project facilities pursuant to a contract with the Secretary.

(e) The term "landholding" means total irrigable acreage of one or more tracts of land owned or operated under a lease which is served with irrigation water pursuant to a contract with the Secretary.

(f) The term "qualified recipient" means an individual who is a citizen of the United States or a resident alien thereof or any legal entity established under State or Federal law which benefits twenty-five such individuals or less.

(g) The term "limited recipient" means any legal entity established under State or Federal law benefiting more that twenty-five individuals.

(h) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 202. (a) The provisions of the Federal reclamation laws shall remain in full force and effect, except to the extent such laws are amended by, or are inconsistent with, this Act.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall repeal or amend any existing statutory exemptions from the acreage limitation of the Federal reclamation law.

ACREAGE LIMITATION

SEC. 203. (a)(1) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law to the contrary, irrigation water may be delivered to a qualified or limited recipient for use in the irrigation of a landholding of not more than one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of class I lands, or the equivalent thereof: Provided, That not more than six hundred and forty acres of such landholding may be owned by a limited recipient.

(2) Lands leased for a term of one year or less for the purpose of water management and conservation in years of inadequate project water supply shall not be considered as part of a landholding solely because of having been so leased.

(b) Irrigation water may be delivered to lands leased in excess of a landholding of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres or the equivalent thereof as described in subsection (a), only if full cost as defined in subsection 201(b) of this Act is paid for such water as is assignable to those lands leased in excess of a landholding of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres in the case of a qualified recipient or lands leased in excess of a landholding of six hundred and forty acres in the case of a limited recipient: Provided, That "full cost" shall not be applied to excess lands under recordable contract.

(c) In determining the extent of a landholding the Secretary shall add to any landholding held directly by a qualified or limited recipient that portion of any landholding held indirectly by such qualified or limited recipient which benefits that owner in proportion to that ownership.

EQUIVALENCY

SEC. 204. Wherever an acreage limitation is imposed by the Federal reclamation law, including this Act, the Secretary, upon the request of a contracting entity, shall designate lands under the applicable acreage limitation within a district classified as having class I productive potential or the equivalent thereof in other lands of lesser productive potential. Standards and criteria for determination of land classes pursuant to this authority shall take into account all factors which significantly affect the economic feasibility of irrigated agriculture, including but not limited to, soil characteristics, crop adaptability, costs of crop production, and length of growing season.

RESIDENCY NOT REQUIRED

SEC. 205. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, irrigation water made available from the operation of reclamation project facilities shall not be withheld from delivery to any project lands for the reason that the owners, lessees, or operators do not live on or near them.

RECORDABLE CONTRACTS

SEC. 206. (a)(1) Irrigation water made available in the operation of reclamation project facilities constructed after the enactment of this Act may not be delivered for use in the irrigation of lands held in excess of the acreage limitations imposed by the Federal reclamation law, including this Act, unless and until the owners thereof shall have executed a recordable contract with the Secretary.

(2) Lands held in excess of the acreage limitations imposed by the Federal reclamation law, including this Act, which on the date of enactment of this Act are or are capable of receiving delivery of irrigation water made available by the operation of existing reclamation project facilities may receive such deliveries only: (i) if the disposal of the owner's interest in such lands is required by an existing recordable contract with the Secretary, or (ii) if the owners of such lands have requested that a recordable contract be executed by the Secretary.

(b) The recordable contracts referred to in subsection (a) shall require the disposal of interests in excess lands within a reasonable time to be established by the Secretary, but shall not exceed ten years after the recordable contract is executed by the Secretary in accordance with terms and conditions required by the Federal reclamation law generally, except that the aforementioned time in years shall be five years for a recordable contract entered into after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) Recordable contracts existing on the date of enactment shall be amended at the request of the landowner to conform with the acreage limitations contained in this Act: Provided, That the time period for disposal of excess lands specified in the existing recordable contract shall not be extended except as provided in subsection (e).

(d) All recordable contracts covering excess lands sales shall provide that a power of attorney shall vest in the Secretary to sell any excess lands not disposed of by the owners thereof within the period of time specified in the contracts. In the exercise of that power, the Secretary shall sell such lands through an impartial selection process only to qualified purchasers according to such reasonable rules and regulations as he may establish: Provided, That the Secretary shall recover for the owner the fair market value of the land and improvements thereon unrelated to irrigation water deliveries.

(e) The period of time for which the disposal of excess lands may have been required under recordable contracts executed under the Federal reclamation law, including this Act, are hereby, and in the future shall be, extended for the period of time in which the Secretary shall have withheld the processing or approval of the disposition of such lands, whether he may have been compelled to do so by court order or whether he may have declined to do so for other reasons.

(f) Excess lands which have been or may be disposed of in compliance with the Federal reclamation law, including this Act, shall not be considered eligible to receive irrigation water unless—

(1) they held by nonexcess owners; and

(2) in the case of disposals made after the date of enactment of this Act, their title is burdened by a covenant prohibiting their sale, for a period of ten years after their original disposal to comply with the Federal reclamation law, including this Act, for values exceeding the sum of the value of newly added improvements and the value of the land as increased by market appreciation unrelated to the delivery of irrigation water. Upon expiration of the terms of such covenant, the title to such lands shall be freed of the burden of any limitations on subsequent sale values which might otherwise be imposed by the operation of section 432e of title 43, United States Code.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS PROJECTS

SEC. 207. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary, neither the acreage limitation provisions nor the other provisions of the Federal reclamation laws, including this act, shall be applicable to lands receiving benefits from Federal water resources projects constructed by the United States Army Corps of Engineers, unless—

(1) the project has, by Federal statute, explicitly been designated, made a part of, or integrated with a Federal reclamation project; or

(2) the Secretary, pursuant to his authority under the Federal reclamation law, has provided project works for the control or conveyance of an agricultural water supply for the lands involved.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this section to the contrary, obligations that require water users, pursuant to contracts with the Secretary, to repay the share of construction costs and to pay the share of the operation and maintenance and contract administrative costs of a Corps of Engineers project which are allocated to conservation storage or irrigation storage shall remain in effect.

REPAYMENT OF CONSTRUCTION CHARGES

SEC. 208. (a) The acreage limitation provisions of the Federal reclamation law shall cease to apply to any part of a landholding upon completion of the repayment by any contracting entity of the amount of any construction costs required to be repaid by such contracting entity (of by a person within the district pursuant to a contract existing on the date of enactment of this Act) by the terms of any contracts with the Secretary relating to the delivery of water supplies to such part of a landholding for agricultural use: Provided, That where any such contract may be entered into pursuant to the authority of the Rehabilitation and Betterment Act (Act of October 7, 1949, 63 Stat. 724, as amended), the contracting entity shall have the additional option of adopting a form of repayment consistent with section 5(c)(2) of the Small Reclamation Projects Act of 1956 (Act of August 6, 1956, 70 Stat. 1044, as amended) and if such form of repayment is adopted, the acreage limitation provisions of the Federal reclamation law shall not apply solely as a result of the indebtedenss under such contract.

(b) The Secretary shall provide, upon request of any owner of a landholding for which repayment has occurred, a certificate acknowledging that the landholding is free of the acAny certificate issued prior to the date of enactment of this Act is hereby ratified.

(c) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as authorizing or permitting lump sum or accelerated repayment of construction costs, except in the case of a repayment contract which is in effect upon the date of enactment of this Act and which provides for such lump sum or accelerated repayment by an individual or district or except as provided in subsection (d) of this section.

(d) The Secretary is authorized to negotiate with such contracting entity to conform the terms of any such contract to permit lump sum or accelerated repayment if the Secretary finds that the amount of outstanding indebtedness is less than 5 per centum of the total repayment obligation associated with such contract and that a pattern of family farming has been established in the project service area.

(a) the agricultural produce and the proceeds of sales of such produce are directly used only for charitable purposes;

(b) said land is operated by said individual religious or charitable entity or organization (or subdivisions thereof); and

(c) no part of the net earnings of such religious or charitable entity or organization (or subdivision thereof) shall inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 210. Neither the limitations and restrictions imposed by this Act nor any other provision of the Federal reclamation law shall prohibit the delivery of irrigation water—

(a) so long as the lands are held by an individual or corporate trustee in a fiduciary capacity for a beneficiary or beneficiaries whose interests in the lands served do not exceed the limits imposed by the Federal reclamation law, including this Act;

(b) when the lands served receive only a temporary, not to exceed one year, supply made possible as a result of—

(1) an unusually large water supply not otherwise storable for project purposes; or

(2) infrequent and otherwise unmanaged flood flows of short duration;

(c) when the lands are acquired by involuntary foreclosure, or similar involuntary process of law, by bona fide conveyance in satisfaction of a debt (including, but not limited to, a mortgage, real estate contract, of deed of trust), by inheritance, by devise: Provided, That if after acquisition, such lands are not qualified under the Federal reclamation law, including this Act, they shall be furnished temporarily with a water supply for a period not exceeding ten years from the effective date of such acquisition;

(d) to isolated tracts found by the Secretary to be economically farmable only if they are included in a larger farming operation but which may, as a result of their inclusion in that operation, cause it to exceed the acreage limitations of the Federal reclamation law, including this Act;

(e) to lands which will receive a substitute water supply and will be required by the Secretary in his contract with the district to reduce ground water pumping in equal quantity from aquifers in the project area as a condition of receiving substitute water from a Federal reclamation project.

CONTRACT REQUIRED

SEC. 211. Irrigation water temporarily made available from reclamation facilities in excess of ordinary quantities not otherwise storable for project purposes or at times when such water would not have been available without the operations of those facilities, may be used for irrigation, municipal, or industrial purposes only to the extent covered by a contract requiring payment for the use of such water, executed in accordance with the Reclamation Project Act of 1939, or other applicable provisions of the Federal reclamation laws: Provided, however, That the Secretary shall have the authority to waive such payments for water delivered in section 210(b)(2).

(1) written; and

(2) for a term not to exceed ten years, including any exercisable options: Provided, however, That with the prior approval of the Secretary, leases of lands for the production of perennial crops having an average life of more than ten years may be for periods of time equal to the average life of the perennial crop but in any event not to exceed twenty-five years. In addition, the Secretary shall be provided with a certificate signed by the lessee which contains a legal description of the leased land, including a statement of the number of acres leased, the term of the lease, and a certification that the rent paid reflects the reasonable value of the irrigation water to the productivity of the land.

(b) Any lease in effect as of January 1, 1982, shall be required to comply with the provisions of this Act within ten years of enactment of this Act.

(c) Lessees holding lands in excess of the acreage limitation of this Act or of any other provisions of the Federal reclamation law under the provisions of a valid written lease effective as of January 1, 1982, shall be required to comply with the appropriate acreage limitation within ten years of enactment of this Act.

REPORTING

SEC. 216. On a date set by the Secretary following the date of enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, every such contracting entity shall provide in a form suitable to the Secretary such reports on the above matters as the Secretary may require.

REPORT TO CONGRESS ON THE PRODUCTION OF SURPLUS CROPS ON ACREAGE SERVED BY IRRIGATION WATERS

SEC. 217. Within one year of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture, with the cooperation of the Secretary of the Interior, shall transmit to the Congress a report on the production of surplus crops on acreage served by irrigation waters. The report shall include—

(1) data delineating the production of surplus crops on lands served by irrigation waters;

(2) the percentage of participation of farms served by irrigation waters in set-aside programs, by acreage, crop, and State;

(3) the feasibility and appropriateness of requiring the participation in acreage set-aside programs of farms served by irrigation waters and the costs of such a requirement; and

(4) any recommendations concerning how to coordinate national reclamation policy with agriculture policy to help alleviate recurring problems of surplus crops and low commodity prices.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF RESPONSIBLE WATER CONSERVATION MEASURES

SEC. 218. The Secretary shall, pursuant to his authorities under otherwise existing Federal reclamation laws, encourage the full consideration and incorporation of prudent and responsible water conservation measures in the operations of non-Federal recipients of irrigation water from Federal reclamation projects, where such measures are shown to be economically feasible for such non-Federal recipients.

TITLE III

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

SEC. 301. The Congress finds that—

(1) water rights claims of the Papago Tribe with respect to the San Xavier Reservation and the Schuk Toak District of the Sells Papago Reservation are the subject of existing and prospective lawsuits against numerous parties in southern Arizona, including major mining companies, agricultural interests, and the city of Tucson;

(2) these lawsuits not only will prove expensive and time consuming for all participants, but also could have a profound adverse impact upon the health and development of the Indian and non-Indian economies of southern Arizona;

(3) the parties to the lawsuits and others interested in the settlement of the water rights claims of the Papago Indians within the Tucson Active Management Area and that part of the Upper Santa Cruz Basin not within that area have diligently attempted to settle these claims and the Federal Government, by providing the assistance specified in this title, will make possible the execution and implementation of a permanent settlement agreement;

(4) it is in the long-term interest of the United States, the State of Arizona, its political subdivisions, the Papago Indian Tribe, and the non-Indian community of southern Arizona that the United States Government assist in the implementation of a fair and equitable settlement of the water rights claims of the Papago Indians respecting certain portions of the Papago Reservation; and

(5) the settlement contained in this title will—

(A) provide the necessary flexibility in the management of water resources and will encourage allocation of those resources to their highest and best uses; and

(B) insure conservation and management of water resources in a manner consistent with the goals and programs of the State of Arizona and the Papago Tribe.

(1) in the case of the San Xavier Reservation—

(A) deliver annually from the main project works of the Central Arizona Project twenty-seven thousand acre-feet of water suitable for agricultural use to the reservation in accordance with the provisions of section 304(a); and

For those features of the irrigation system described in paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B) of section 303(a) which are not authorized to be constructed under any other provision of law.

(b)(1) In order to encourage the Papago Tribe to develop sources of water on the Sells Papago Reservation, the Secretary shall, if so requested by the tribe, carry out a study to determine the availability and suitability of water resources within the Sells Papago Reservation but outside the Tucson Active management Area and that part of the Upper Santa Cruz Basin not within that area.

(2) The Secretary shall, in cooperation with the Secretary of Energy, or, with the appropriate agency or officials, carry out a study to determine—

(1) agricultural water from the Central Arizona Project which has been contracted for but has been released or will be unused by the contractor during the period in which the Secretary will acquire the water:

(g) No land, water, water rights, contract rights, or reclaimed water may be acquired under subsection (c) without the consent of the owner thereof. No private lands may be acquired under subsection (c)(3)(A) unless the lands have a recent history of receiving or being capable of actually receiving all or substantially all of the water the right to the use of which is recognized by State law. In acquiring said private lands, the Secretary shall give preference to the acquisition of lands upon which water has actually been put to beneficial use in any one of the five years preceding the date of acquisition. Nothing in this section shall authorize the Secretary to acquire or disturb the water rights of any Indian tribe, band, group, or community.

LIMITATION ON PUMPING FACILITIES FOR WATER DELIVERIES; DISPOSITION OF WATER

SEC. 306. (a) The Secretary shall be required to carry out his obligation under subsections (b), (c), and (e) of section 304 and under section 305 only if the Papago Tribe agrees to—

(1) limit pumping of ground water from beneath the San Xavier Reservation to not more than ten thousand acre-feet per year;

(2) limit the quantity of ground water pumped from beneath the eastern Schuk Toak District of the Sells Papago Reservation which lies within the Tucson Active Management Area to those quantities being withdrawn on January 1, 1981; and

(3) comply with the management plan established by the Secretary under section 303(a)(3).

Nothing contained in paragraph (1) shall restrict the tribe from drilling wells and withdrawing ground water therefrom on the San Xavier Reservation if such wells have a capacity of less than fifty-five gallons per minute and are used only for domestic and livestock purposes. Nothing contained in paragraph (2) shall restrict the tribe from drilling wells and withdrawing ground water therefrom in the eastern Schuk Toak District of the Sells Papago Reservation which lies within the Tucson Active Management Area if such wells have a capacity of less than thirty-five gallons per minute and which are used only for domestic and livestock purposes.

(b) The Secretary shall be required to carry out his obligations with respect to distribution systems under paragraphs (1)(B) and (2)(B) of section 303(a) only if the Papago Tribe agrees to—

(1) subjugate, at no cost to the United States, the land for which those distribution systems are to be planned, designed, and constructed by the Secretary; and

(2) assume responsibility, through the tribe or its members or an entity designated by the tribe, as appropriate, following completion of those distribution systems and upon delivery of water under this title, for the operation, maintenance, and replacement of these systems in accordance with the first section of the Act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. 583; 25 U.S.C. 385).

(c)(1) The Papago Tribe shall have the right to devote all water supplies under this title, whether delivered by the Secretary or pumped by the tribe, to any use, including but not limited to agricultural, municipal, industrial, commercial, mining, or recreational use whether within or outside the Papago Reservation so long as such use is within the Tucson Active Management Area and that part of the Upper Santa Cruz Basin not within such area.

(2) The Papago Tribe may sell, exchange, or temporarily dispose of water, but the tribe may not permanently alienate any water right. In the event of the tribe sells, exchanges, or temporarily disposes of water, such sale, exchange, or temporary disposition shall be pursuant to a contract which has been accepted and ratified by a resolution of the Papago Tribal Council and approved and executed by the Secretary as agent and trustee for the tribe. Such contract shall specifically provide that an action may be maintained by the contracting party against the United States and the Secretary for the breach thereof. The net proceeds from any sale, exchange, or disposition of water by the Papago Tribe shall be used for social or economic programs or for tribal administrative purposes which benefit the Papago Tribe.

(d) Nothing in section 106(c) shall be construed to establish whether or not reserved water may be put to use, or sold for use, off of any reservation to which reserved water rights attach.

Such study and analysis shall be completed within one year after the date of the enactment of this title.

(b) If, on the basis of the study and analysis conducted under subsection (a), the Secretary determines that lands have been rendered unsuitable for agriculture for the reasons set forth in subsection (a), and if the Papago Tribe consents, the Secretary is authorized to exchange such lands for an equivalent acreage of land under his jurisdiction which are within the Federal public domain and which, but for their suitability for agriculture, are of like quality.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 315 This title may be cited as the "Southern Arizona Water Rights Settlement Act of 1982".

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the amendment I am proposing on behalf of myself and Senator JACKSON, is intended to provide the legislative basis for a Senate-House conference on the reclamation bills passed by the respective houses. H.R. 5539, the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982, was passed by the House on May 6, 1982. The companion bill was passed by the Senate on July 16, 1982, and its text was substituted for the House test in H.R. 5539. The Senate insisted on its substitute amendment, asked for conference, and appointed the following conferees: Senators McCLURE, HATFIELD, DOMENICI, WALLOP, WARNER, JACKSON, JOHNSTON, FORD, and METZENBAUM. As of this date, the House has not agreed to the requested conference on H.R. 5539. I believe it is general knowledge that the House has not acted because of the continued negotiations between the administration and members of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee regarding the Papago Indian Water bill, H.R. 5518, which was vetoed by the President on June 1, 1982. Further action by the House on the reclamation reform bill has been delayed pending successful resolution of the Papago Indian water issue.

Mr. President, S. 1409 is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate and maintain modifications at the existing Buffalo Bill Dam and Reservoir, and for other purposes. S. 1409 passed the Senate on June 22, 1982. Earlier this week, on August 17, 1982, the House passed S. 1409 with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The substitute included three separate titles. Title I is the exact text of S. 1409 as it passed the Senate. Title II is the exact text of H.R. 5539, the reclamation reform bill, as it passed the House. Title III is the text of a House proposal for the modified Papago Indian bill. After passage of S. 1409, the House insisted on its amendments, asked for a conference, and appointed conferees.

This Senator and other Members of the Senate were particularly pleased that the House has not taken action to send the extremely important reclamation reform bill to conference. Unfortunately, however, the House-requested conference on S. 1409 would accomplish that objective without including the Senate-passed reclamation bill as matter committed to the conference. Also, there would be no companion Senate provision for the Papago Indian bill included in the House-passed title III. Consequently, it is now necessary for the Senate to act to amend the bill to include the necessary companion textual matter for full conference consideration of these issues.

The pending amendment is an amendment in the nature of a substitute with three companion titles to the House substitute. Title I is the Senate Buffalo Bill legislation as passed on June 22. It would be the same text as included in title I of the House amendment, and therefore would be nonconferenceable.

Title II of the pending amendment is the text of the reclamation bill as passed by the Senate on July 16. It would be the companion provision for the text of the House-passed reclamation bill in title II of the House amendment. The conference, therefore, would proceed on the normal basis of the differences in the two reclamation reform bills as passed by the House and Senate. Consequently, this action would have the same parliamentary result as the Senate action of July 16, 1982, asking for a conference directly on H.R. 5539, the reclamation reform bill.

Title III of the pending amendment is the text of the agreement on the Papago Indian water matter negotiated between the House Interior Committee, the Senate delegation from Arizona, and the Secretary of the Interior. It would be the companion text for the earlier House proposal in title III of the House amendment. The chairman and ranking minority member of the House Interior Committee, Congressman UDALL and Congressman LUJAN, have assured the parties involved in that negotiation and Senator JACKSON and myself, that the House will recede on title III and accept the Senate text incorporating the new agreement. This action would be taken without any further negotiation on the differences between the earlier House proposal and the text of the Senate title III. Consequently, it is not intended by either the House or the Senate that title III will be the subject of any conference action other than the prearranged agreement of the House to recede to the Senate. It is important to note also that the Papago Indian water bill was within the jurisdiction of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs and not the jurisdiction of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. This discussion of the Papago Indian water matter and the actions on title III appropriately have been the subject of prior consultation and agreement with the chairman and ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, Senator COHEN and Senator MELCHER, as well as the members of the Arizona delegation, Senator GOLDWATER and Senator DECONCINI.

The net intended effect of this somewhat complicated proceeding would be to place the Senate and House in a regular conference on the differences in their respective reclamation reform bills included in title II of S. 1409. Title I, the text of the Buffalo Bill legislation, will be nonconferenceable. Title III of the bill will only involve the House receding, and the resulting adoption of the Senate text.

In light of all these circumstances, it only appears necessary at this time for the Senate upon passage of S. 1409 with this amendment in the nature of a substitute as I have described, to appoint conferees with responsibility for the reclamation reform bill in title II. Those conferees have already been identified in the Senate action of July 16. There does not appear to be any need for any conferees from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs. If, for some totally unforeseen circumstance, there would be the necessity for the Conference Committee to take any action on title III other than the House directly receding it then would be appropriate and necessary for conferees from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs to be appointed to represent the Senate in any negotiation on the Papago Indian water matter. Such action does not appear to be necessary at this time, as I have discussed with Senator COHEN and Senator MELCHER, as well as the Arizona delegation.

Mr. President, these procedures should allow the conferees on the reclamation reform bill to proceed to conference immediately following the pending recess. It is the fond hope of the Senator from Idaho and the other Senate conferees, as well as all interested parties in the reclamation community, to obtain swift action to resolve the modest differences between the House and Senate bills, and then proceed expeditiously to obtain enactment before the adjournment of this Congress. I certainly appreciate the good faith and continued efforts of our colleagues in the House and Secretary Watt and their respective excellent staffs in arriving at this point in the process. I urge all interested parties as we go forward into conference to cooperate as fully as possible in seeking enactment of this critical legislation in this Congress. I also wish to thank the leadership of the Senate for its assistance and support in fashioning this procedure to place the two bodies in conference on these important issues.●

The motion to concur in the House amendment with further Senate amendments was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and request a conference with the House, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. WARNER, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. FORD, and Mr. METZENBAUM conferees on the part of the Senate.

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, this measure is before the Senate now as a privileged matter in lieu of the formal conference report.

Mr. President, I strongly urge final passage of H.R. 6350, the Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement and Extension Act of 1982. The legislation pending before us today is the result of a compromise reached by the House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committees in an excellent bipartisan effort that reflects our important commitment to meeting the needs of our Nation's veterans, especially through the provision of quality medical care. I greatly enjoy working with the House's "Mr. Chairman," SONNY MONTGOMERY. The various provisions of the bill are designed to improve the quality, scope, and efficiency of the Veterans' Administration's health-care system.

On April 15, 1982, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I introduced S. 2385. As introduced, S. 2385 would have amended the Veterans' Administration's health professional scholarship program to provide scholarship assistance to VA-employed nurses attending school on a part-time basis, and to permit funds appropriated for the health scholarship program for fiscal year 1982 to be used until expended.

On April 15, 1982, at the request of the administration, I also introduced S. 2383 and S. 2384. As introduced, S. 2383 would have extended, for 4 years, the VA's authority to provide construction grants to State veterans' homes. S. 2384 would have extended, for 1 year, the VA's authority to provide contract hospital care for certain veterans in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

On April 21, 1982, the committee held a hearing on these bills and a number of other measures and, on May 28, 1982, the committee voted to report favorably S. 2385, with an amendment in the nature of a committee substitute and a title amendment. S. 2385, as reported, consists of provisions derived with modifications from S. 2383, S. 2384, S. 2385, and S. 2389.

I am most pleased that the compromise agreement, H.R. 6350, contains all of the major provisions of S. 2385, with some modifications. A number of these provisions are targeted toward improving the recruitment and retention of VA nurses.

The compromise agreement modifies the VA health professional scholarship program to allow VA nurses who are employed full time at the time of their application and notification of their acceptance, to participate in the scholarship program on a part-time basis. This provision was designed to reward those VA employees whose dedication and commitment to the agency have been established by providing an alternative to attending school full time. Many VA nurses have expressed a strong desire for this program extension, noting that due to a financial need or family responsibility, going to school full time would result in a hardship, which in many instances, would result in an inability to participate in the scholarship program. The nurses who are currently VA employees deserve this added incentive to improve their educational and career opportunities.

Other provisions in this bill are intended to provide added recruitment incentives for registered nurses in the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery. These incentives are greatly needed in order for the VA to be able to compete with private sector hospitals in the hiring and retention of nursing personnel. The ratio of nurses to patients has a direct impact on the quality of patient care in VA hospitals. Over the past several years the nursing shortage and other factors have caused some hospital wards to be closed. It has also resulted in poor morale among many VA nurses who have tried to remain loyal throughout this difficult period of shortages of professional nursing staff.

These various improvements designed to spur recruitment include provisions that would give the Administrator discretionary authority to extend, on a nationwide, local or other geographic basis, the period for which additional pay may be paid—to include some or all of a tour that begins or ends on a Saturday. They would also authorize the Administrator—but only when absolutely necessary to recruit nurses—within specific limitations, to provide that a nurse may work two regularly scheduled 12-hour tours of duty during a weekend, and have such service be considered as a full 40-hour workweek. This is referred to in some contexts as the "Baylor plan."

Mr. President, I look forward to the implementation of the provisions of this legislation which are designed to aid in the recruitment and retention of VA health-care personnel. The provision of quality health care, especially to veterans suffering from service-connected disabilities, is one of the most important missions of the VA.

A description of other provisions in this bill, as well as a more detailed explanation of the provisions I have just described, will follow in the text of the explanatory statement. I ask that this explanatory statement be printed at the end of my remarks.

Mr. SIMPSON. In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to sincerely thank the distinguished ranking member from California, Senator CRANSTON, for his usual patient and invaluable assistance throughout the entire process of drafting this bill and reaching a very equitable compromise, and all other members of the committee, who are cosponsors of this measure, as are Senators COHEN and BURDICK.

In addition, I should like to recognize and thank the very able members of the majority staff for their efforts: Tom Harvey, chief counsel and staff director; Julie Susman; Koreen Kelleher, a valuable former member of the staff; Laurie Altemose, Becky Hucks, and Kay Eckhardt; our editorial director, Harold Carter; as well as the capable members of the minority staff: Jonathan Steinberg, Ed Scott, Bill Brew, Katy Burdick, and Ingrid Post. The hard work and cooperation of my most capable and effective counterpart on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, G. V. "SONNY" MONTGOMERY, and his hard-working, capable staff, headed by Mack Fleming, were essential to the achievement of what I feel to be an equitable compromise.

Mr. President, at this time I would urge that my colleagues join me in assuring the Senate's favorable consideration of this bill.

The explanatory statement follows:

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT ON HOUSE BILL, SENATE AMENDMENT (S. 2385), AND COMPROMISE AGREEMENT ON H.R. 6350, THE "VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HEALTH-CARE PROGRAMS IMPROVEMENT AND EXTENSION ACT OF 1982"

PAY AND WORK SCHEDULES FOR NURSES AND CERTAIN OTHER HEALTH-CARE PERSONNEL

Both the House bill (section 1) and the Senate amendment (section 3) would amend subsection (e) of present section 4107 of title 38, United States Code, relating to rates of additional pay for registered nurses and (by virtue of subsection (f)) certain other health-care personnel employed in VA facilities under title 38, to give the Administrator discretionary authority, under paragraph (3) of that subsection, to extend on a nationwide, local, or other geographic basis the period for which additional pay is paid under that paragraph for certain work on a weekend—presently limited to a period of work that occurs at least in part on a Sunday.

The House bill would have amended present paragraph (3) to authorize the Administrator to provide additional pay, at a rate of up to 25 percent of the applicable basic hourly rate, for each hour of service on a tour any part of which is on a Saturday. Under the House bill, the Administrator would set the rate of such additional pay within a geographic area at a percentage, up to 25 percent, that the Administrator considers necessary to retain and recruit adequate nursing staff in that area.

The Senate amendment would have amended present paragraph (10), relating to the Administrator's authority to modify rates of additional pay, to authorize the Administrator to provide additional pay—at a rate of 25 percent of the applicable basic hourly rate, the rate set forth in present paragraph (3)—for some or all of a tour that occurs on a Saturday. Under the Senate amendment, the authority would be available when its use is justified on the basis of a review of the need for it.

The compromise agreement (section 2(a)) contains a provision that would amend paragraph (10) of present subsection (e) to provide the Administrator with discretionary authority to extend, on a nationwide, local, or other geographic basis, the period for which additional pay is paid under paragraph (3) to include some or all of a tour that occurs at least in part on a Saturday. The authority would be available if the Administrator has determined that its use is necessary for recruitment and retention purposes and that the extension is justified on the basis of a review of the need for it in the geographic area involved. The rate of such additional pay for "Saturday" work would be set at a rate determined necessary for recruitment and retention purposes but not in excess of the percentage rate specified in paragraph (3)—25 percent under current law. As noted above, the Administrator has discretionary authority under paragraph (10) to increase that percentage. Such increase may be made where necessary for recruitment and retention purposes, and where the percentage has been increased, the higher percentage would replace the 25-percent limitation on additional pay for "Saturday" work.

The Senate amendment (section 3(1)), but not the House bill, would have further amended paragraph (10) to provide that any discretionary increase under that paragraph in rates of additional pay may be made on a nationwide, local, or other geographic basis, provided that the increase is justified by a specified review of the need for it.

The compromise agreement (section 2(a)) contains this provision and a provision (section 2(b)) amending subsection (f) of section 4107, relating to the general applicability of the additional-pay provisions in subsection (e) to physician assistants or expanded-function dental auxiliaries or both, to clarify that the provisions of subsection (e)(10) are applicable to these categories of personnel (that is, may be applied, as a matterng to the pay of VA Department of Medicine and Surgery (DM&S) personnel employed under the DM&S title 38 personnel system, to authorize the Administrator, when necessary to recruit or retain registered nurses in DM&S, subject to specified limitations relating to rates of pay and computations of leave, to provide that a nurse may work two regularly-scheduled twelve-hour tours of duty during a weekend and have such service be considered a full forty-hour workweek.

The compromise agreement (section 2(c)) contains a provision derived from these provisions.

The House bill would have limited eligibility for participation in the "Baylor plan" program to VA nurses appointed under section 4104 of title 38, all of whom are permanent VA employees. The Senate amendment would have permitted all nurses appointed under subchapter I of chapter 73 to participate in the program, thereby making possible the participation of temporary as well as permanent VA employees.

The compromise agreement would allow all VA nurses appointed under subchapter I to participate in the program. In adopting this approach, the Committee stress that they intend and expect that, to the extent that the use of this authority for weekend scheduling is necessary, the "Baylor plan" opportunity will first be offered to permanent employees and that it will be offered to temporary employees only as a last resort in order to obtain adequate nurse staffing.

Under the House bill, a nurse working such a weekend schedule—a so-called "Baylor plan" Schedule—would be entitled to additional pay under subsection (e)(5) of present section 4107, relating to additional pay for overtime service, when the nurse's total officially ordered or approved services is in excess of either fifty-two hours during his or her administrative workweek (the period from Sunday to Saturday), eight hours on a day other than a Saturday or Sunday, or twelve hours on a Saturday or Sunday. Under the Senate amendment, such a nurse would be entitled to additional pay under subsection (e)(5) when the total officially ordered or approved service is in excess of either forty hours during the nurse's administrative workweek, eight hours on a day other than a Saturday or Sunday, or twenty-four hours within the weekend period during which the two regularly-scheduled twelve hour tours of duty are worked.

The compromise agreement would specify that additional pay for "Baylor-plan" nurses would, with certain exceptions, be paid in accordance with the provisions of current law—section 4107(e) for permanent employees and, for temporary employees, section 4114(a), which authorizes temporary and part-time appointments and the administrative establishment of pay rates for those with such appointments. Thus, a "Baylor-plan" nurse would generally be entitled to overtime pay only for officially ordered or approved service that is in excess of eight hours on a day other than a Saturday or Sunday or in excess of twenty-four hours on a weekend, and would not be eligible for "night differential" pay (under section 4107(e)(2)) for tours beginning during the period between 6 P.M. and 6 A.M. on a Saturday or Sunday, for "holiday" pay (under section 4107(e)(4)) when a holiday occurs on a Saturday or Sunday, or—except as described in the next sentence of this discussion—for overtime pay (under section 4107(e)(5)) for work in excess of forty hours in an administrative workweek. However, if the Administrator determines it to be further necessary in order to obtain or retain the services of nurses so as to obtain adequate staffing at a particular facility, a "Baylor-plan" nurse may be paid additional pay for service in excess of forty hours—or in excess of such number of hours over 40 that the Administrator determines with respect to that facility—in an administrative workweek.

REGULATIONS FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF CERTAIN SPECIAL PERSONNEL AUTHORITIES

The Senate amendment (section 10), but not the House bill, would require the Administrator, within 90 days after the date of enactment, to publish in the Federal Register, for a 60-day public-review and comment period, proposed regulations for the implementation of the discretionary authorities in section 4107(e)(10) (as proposed to be amended in part by section 2 of the compromise agreement) to increase rates of additional pay and (as proposed to be added by section 2 of the compromise agreement) to extend the period for which additional pay is paid for certain weekend work and the authority in present section 4107(g) to increase rates of basic pay for certain health-care personnel. The Administrator would be required to publish final regulations within 210 days after the date of enactment.

The compromise agreement (section 2(d)) contains this provisions with amendments making this requirement applicable also to the "Baylor plan" regulations under new subsection (h) of section 4107 (as provided to be added by section 2 of the compromise agreement) and extending to 300 days the post-enactment deadline for publication of final regulations to implement all of these authorities.

The Committees note that the deadline for final regulations is extended, upon the VA's request, to ensure that adequate time is provided for the agency fully to take into account the views of all parties. Also, the Committees emphasize that this 300-day period is only a maximum. Thus, the Committees urge that every effort be made to publish final regulations in a lesser period of time.

HEALTH PROFESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

The Senate amendment (section 2), but not the House bill, would amend various provisions in subchapter IV of chapter 73 of title 38, relating to the VA's Health Professional Scholarship Program, to authorize the Administrator to provide scholarship assistance to VA health-care employees attending school on a part-time basis; to clarify that the amount of the stipend to be paid to a participant under the program may be modified so that the Administrator may limit, to tuition reimbursement and a nominal stipend, its payments to a VA employee participating in the scholarship program as a part-time student; to authorize, in the case of part-time students, an up-to-2-year extension of the 4-year limit on scholarships if the extension is in the best interest of the United States and the student maintains an acceptable level of academic standing; and to provide that sums appropriated for the purpose of making payments under the Scholarship Program shall remain available for that purpose until expended.

The compromise agreement (section 3) contains a provision derived from this provision with modifications—to limit the VA employees eligible for scholarship assistance for part-time study to those who are full-time employees when they apply for and are awarded a scholarship; to make a part-time student's scholarship contingent upon continued employment in a VA health-care facility and make the scholarship pay-back requirement (in section 4144(b) of title 38) applicable to a part-time student who fails to maintain such employment; to specify that no stipend may be paid to a full-time VA employee participating in the Scholarship Program; and to delete the provision extending the availability of appropriated funds.

The compromise agreement also contains certain conforming and clarifying amendments. These include amendments that would clarify the Administrator's responsibility (under section 4143(b)(2)) to act promptly with respect to the appointment and assignment of scholarship recipients after they have completed their training (where such action is necessary) so that they may begin to discharge their service obligations without undue delay; would clarify the provision (section 4142(c)) regarding the date on which a period of obligated service begins so as to specify, in the case of a scholarship recipient who is also a VA employee, that the period begins as soon as that individual has completed training and is appointed or assigned as a full-time employee in the Department of Medicine and Surgery in a position for which the training prepared him or her; and would make certain conforming changes in the provisions (section 4142(e)) specifying what must be included in the written contract between the Administrator and a scholarship recipient.

With respect to VA employee participation in the Scholarship Program, the Committees note their view that the first preference should be given to those VA employees who, by the length and quality of their VA service, have demonstrated their commitment to the agency. In this way, the Scholarship Program can promote retention not only through the requirement of a period of obligated service in return for scholarship assistance but also through the use of such assistance as a reward for continuity of service to the agency.

With reference to the requirement that VA employees be working on a full-time basis at the time of application and award, the Committees note that this requirement is intended to allow a full-time employee the option to apply to the VA for conversion to part-time service after being notified of the award of a scholarship and beginning the training course. As to the possibility of making the program available to applicants who are working in the VA on a part-time basis, the Committees note that the Scholarship Program is just now about to be implemented and that they intend to follow closely the award of scholarships to full-time employees. After experience has been gained in that regard, the Committees will give further consideration to the need for and desirability of legislation authorizing the award of scholarships to part-time VA employees.

With respect to the provision that would make funds appropriated for the program available until expended, this provision was not included in the compromise agreement in response to the request of the Appropriations Committees. In this connection, the VA has assured the Veterans' Affairs Committees that the $4 million appropriated for this program for fiscal year 1982 in the VA's medical administration and miscellaneous operating expenses (MAMOE) account will be fully obligated by September 30, 1982. With respect to future appropriations, the Veterans' Affairs Committees understand, as a result of staff discussions, that the Appropriations Committees will specifically take into account the need for the extended availability, beyond a single fiscal year, of funds made available for this program.

The Veterans' Affairs Committees are satisfied that, with these understandings, the duration of the availability of funding for the Scholarship Program will receive appropriate attention and that there is, therefore, no need to amend title 38 to extend the availability of appropriated funds for the program.

CONTRACT CARE IN PUERTO RICO AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Both the House bill (section 2) and the Senate amendment (section 4(2)) would amend present section 601(4)(C)(v) of title 38, relating to the Administrator's authority to provide hospital care and medical services in certain noncontiguous "States" (defined in present section 101(20) to include United States Territories and possessions and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico), to extend for one year—from September 30, 1982, until September 30, 1983—the VA's contract authority, in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and other Territories and possessions of the United States, to provide hospital care for non-service-connected disabilities and such medical-care services as will obviate the need for hospital admission for such disabilities.

The compromise agreement (section 4) contains this provision.

The Committees note that this is the second, consecutive short-term extension—the first having been enacted on November 3, 1981, in Public Law 97-72—of this authority to provide certain fee-for-service care in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and that it is likely that further extension will be required before a permanent approach to providing appropriate and cost-effective health care to veterans in those locations can be developed. In order to move toward such an approach as quickly as is possible, the Committees consider it imperative that the VA take immediate steps to develop a comprehensive plan for providing such care and, to the extent that new construction is involved, prepare the needed project or projects for inclusion in the President's budget.

In order to be able to evaluate the VA's proposal in this regard prior to the time that a further, short-term extension of the fee-basis authority is required, the Committees direct that by December 1, 1982, the agency provide them with a specific, detailed proposal, including any construction project that the VA considers necessary, pertaining to health care for eligible veterans in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and, most particularly, for meeting the health-care needs of those veterans included in that population who have service-connected disabilities.

RESTORATION OF CHAMPVA ELIGIBILITY FOR CERTAIN MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

The Senate amendment (section 5), but not the House bill, would amend present section 613 of title 38, relating to eligibility for medical care through the CHAMPVA program for the survivors and dependents of certain severely disabled service-connected disabled veterans, to provide for a reinstatement of CHAMPVA eligibility if an individual, after losing CHAMPVA eligibility by virtue of becoming eligible for hospital insurance benefits under part A of Medicare, exhausts some or all such Medicare eligibility.

The compromise agreement (section 5) contains this provision.

The Committees note that an amendment was enacted last year in Public Law 97-72 (section 105) to section 613(b) to facilitate the treatment in VA facilities of individuals eligible for health care through the CHAMPVA program where the use of those facilities for CHAMPVA beneficiaries would not interfere with the care or treatment of any eligible veteran. In this regard, the Committees urge that, to the extent feasible and with a view toward optimal utilization of VA health-care facilities, the VA use this authority as much as possible with respect to those whose eligibility would be restored under the compromise agreement as well as current CHAMPVA beneficiaries.

EXTENSION FOR REPORT ON ALCOHOL AND DRUG DEPENDENCE AND ABUSE PILOT PROGRAM

The Senate amendment (section 6), but not the House bill, would amend subsection (f) of present section 620A of title 38, relating to the Administrator's report to the Committees on the pilot program of alcohol and drug treatment and rehabilitation being conducted under that section, to extend by one year both the due date of the report—from March 31, 1983, to March 31, 1984—and the end date of the period of pilot program operations to be covered in the report—from September 30, 1982, to September 30, 1983.

The compromise agreement (section 6) contains this provision.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT RELATING TO PAYMENTS TO STATE VETERANS' HOMES

The Senate amendment (section 7), but not the House bill, would amend present section 643 of title 38, relating to payments to State veterans' homes for care provided to eligible veterans, to strike an anachronistic reference to service during a period of war as an eligibility factor for such payments. This would conform section 643 to section 641, which sets forth the operative criteria for payments by the VA to State veterans' homes.

The compromise agreement (section 7) contains this provision.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR GRANTS TO STATE VETERANS' HOMES

Both the House bill (section 3) and the Senate amendment (section 8) would amend present section 5033(a) of title 38, relating to the authorization of appropriations for matching-fund grants to States for the construction of State veterans' home domiciliary and nursing-home facilities and to expand, remodel, or alter existing buildings for furnishing domiciliary, nursing-home, or hospital care in State veterans' homes, to extend the current authorization of appropriations (at a level of "such sums as may be necessary"). The House bill would extend the authorization for three years (through fiscal year 1985); the Senate amendment would extend the authorization for four years (through fiscal year 1986).

The compromise agreement (section 8) contains a provision to extend the authorization for four years, through fiscal year 1986.

EXCHANGE OF MEDICAL INFORMATION WITH STATE VETERANS' HOMES

The Senate amendment (section 9), but not the House bill, would amend present section 5054(b) of title 38, relating to the discretionary authority to make available to non-VA medical facilities, particularly those near VA facilities in remote areas, VA educational facilities and programs and the VA electronic communications capability linking such VA facilities to major medical centers and to charge a fee for such services, to include an express reference to State veterans' homes as part of the surrounding medical community eligible to participate in such reimbursable medical information programs.

The compromise agreement (section 9) contains this provision.

REPORT ON THE USE OF FLEXIBLE AND COMPRESSED WORK SCHEDULES BY THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The Senate amendment (section 3(2)), but not the House bill, would have further amended section 4107 (see the first part of this statement for discussion of the other amendments), to authorize the Administrator, upon a determination that it is necessary in order to recruit or retain certain specified categories of health-care personnel in DM&S, to permit the use by such personnel, on a nationwide, local, or other geographic basis, of the flexible and compressed work schedules that were described in regulations and guidelines issued by the Office of Personnel Management in order to carry out the Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1978, Public Law 95-390. This authority would have been available through fiscal year 1987, and the Administrator would have been required to report to the Congress, not later than four years after the date of enactment, on the results of the use by the VA of such alternative work schedules, both as authorized by this provision and otherwise. The mandated report would include an evaluation of the effects of the use of such schedules on the recruitment and retention of health-care personnel, together with recommendations for administrative or legislative action, or both, based on the VA's use of and need for such schedules.

The compromise agreement does not contain the provision authorizing the VA to utilize such alternative work schedules. In light of recent enactment of Public Law 97-221, the Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1982, which provides government-wide authority to utilize alternative work schedules until July 23, 1985, the Committees do not believe that the VA-specific authority proposed in the Senate amendment is needed at this time.

However, because of the Committees' strong interest in the results of the VA's use of this authority, the compromise agreement (section 10) contains a provision, derived from the Senate provision, requiring the Administrator to submit a report—not later than July 1, 1985, one year prior to the expiration of the new government-wide authority—on the VA's experience under that authority. The Committees intend to study that report carefully so that they will be able to assess the VA's use of that authority and to consider again, prior to the expiration of the government-wide authority, the desirability of providing the VA with agency-specific authority.

CONTRACT CARE FOR WOMEN VETERANS

The Senate amendment (section 4(1)), but not the House bill, would amend present section 601(4)(C)(iv) of title 38, relating to the Administrator's authority to provide contract hospital care to women veterans, to expand that authority so as to allow the Administrator to provide, on a fee basis, such outpatient medical services as are needed pre- or post-hospitalization or that would obviate the need for hospital admission for non-service-connected, gender-related disabilities of a woman veteran that the VA itself is not able to treat.

The compromise agreement does not contain this provision. Rather, in light of the expected increase in demand for VA medical services from women veterans in the coming years, the Committees believe that it would be preferable for the agency to build up its in-house staff capacity to meet the gender-related needs of these veterans for outpatient care and are concerned that the new fee-for-services authority proposed in the Senate amendment might discourage that result if enacted. The Committees note that, in those cases in which a particular VA facility does not have the capacity directly to provide such care to an otherwise eligible woman veteran, authorities under two provisions of title 38—section 4117 (authority to contract for service medical specialist services) and section 5053 (authority to enter into agreements for sharing of specialized medical resources)—are available to and should be used by the VA to arrange for furnishing the needed care.

The Committees intend to monitor closely the VA's efforts to meet the health-care needs of the growing population of women veterans and will consider legislative action in the future if that appears necessary.

HOUSE AMENDMENTS TO THE SENATE AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 6350

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill, insert the following:

SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement and Extension Act of 1982".

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or a repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

PAY AND WORK SCHEDULES FOR NURSES AND CERTAIN OTHER HEALTH-CARE PERSONNEL

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (10) of section 4107(e) is amended to read as follows:

"(10)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law but subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C) of this paragraph, if the Administrator determines it to be necessary in order to obtain or retain the services of nurses, the Administrator—

"(i) may increase the rates of additional pay authorized under paragraphs (2) through (8) of this subsection; and

"(ii) may extend the period for which additional pay authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection is paid to include part or all of a tour of duty any part of which is within the period commencing at midnight Friday and ending at midnight Saturday.

"(B) An increase under subparagraph (A)(i) of this paragraph in rates of additional pay (i) may be made at any specific Veterans' Administration health-care facility in order to provide nurses, or any category of nurses, at such facility additional pay in an amount competitive with, but not exceeding, the amount of the same type of pay that is paid to the same category of nurses at non-Federal health-care facilities in the same geographic area as such Veterans' Administration health-care facility (based upon a reasonably representative sampling of such non-Federal facilities), and (ii) may be made on a nationwide, local, or other geographic basis if the Administrator finds that such an increase is justified on the basis of a review of the need for such increase (based upon a reasonably representative sampling of non-Federal health-care facilities in the geographic area involved).

"(C)(i) An extension under subparagraph (A)(ii) of this paragraph of the period for which additional pay may be paid under paragraph (3) of this subsection may be made on a nationwide, local, or other geographic basis. Any such extension shall be based on a determination by the Administrator that such extension is justified on the basis of a review of the need for such extension in such geographic area.

"(ii) The rates of additional pay payable pursuant to an extension under such subparagraph shall be established as a percentage of the applicable hourly rates of basic pay. Such rates of additional pay may not exceed the lesser of (I) the percentage of such hourly rates of basic pay that the Administrator determines is necessary to be paid within the geographic area involved in order to obtain or retain the services of nurses, and (II) the percentage provided for in paragraph (3) of this subsection of the applicable hourly rate of basic pay.".

(b) Section 4107(f) is amended by striking out "paragraphs (2) through (8) of".

(c) Section 4107 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law but subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, if the Administrator determines it to be necessary in order to obtain or retain the services of nurses at any Veterans' Administration health-care facility, the Administrator may provide, in the case of nurses appointed under this subchapter and employed at such facility, that such nurses who work two regularly scheduled 12-hour tours of duty within the period commencing at midnight Friday and ending at midnight the following Sunday shall be considered for all purposes (except computation of full-time equivalent employees for the purposes of determining compliance with personnel ceilings) to have worked a full 40-hour basic workweek.

"(2)(A) Basic and additional pay for a nurse who is considered under paragraph (1) of this subsection to have worked a full 40-hour basic workweek shall be subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C) of this paragraph.

"(B) The hourly rate of basic pay for such a nurse for service performed as part of a regularly scheduled 12-hour tour of duty within the period commencing at midnight Friday and ending at midnight the following Sunday shall be derived by dividing the nurse's annual rate of basic pay by one thousand two hundred and forty-eight.

"(C)(i) Such a nurse who performs a period of service in excess of such nurse's regularly scheduled two 12-hour tours of duty is entitled to overtime pay under subsection (e)(5) of this section, or other applicable law, for officially ordered or approved service performed in excess of eight hours on a day other than a Saturday or Sunday or in excess of 24 hours within the period commencing at midnight Friday and ending at midnight the following Sunday.

"(ii)(I) Except as provided in subdivision (II) of this division, a nurse to whom this paragraph is applicable is not entitled to additional pay under subsection (e) of this section, or other applicable law, for any period included in a regularly scheduled 12-hour tour of duty.

"(II) If the Administrator determines it to be further necessary in order to obtain or retain the services of nurses at a particular facility, a nurse to whom this paragraph is applicable who performs service in excess of such nurse's regularly scheduled two 12-hour tours of duty may be paid overtime pay under subsection (e)(5) of this section, or other applicable law, for all or part of the hours of officially ordered or approved service performed by such nurse in excess of 40 hours during an administrative workweek.

"(3) A nurse described in paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection who is absent on approved sick leave or annual leave during a regularly scheduled 12-hour tour of duty shall be charged for such leave at a rate of five hours of leave for three hours of absence.

"(4) The Administrator shall prescribe regulations for the implementation of this subsection.".

(d)(1) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall publish in the Federal Register, for public review and comment for a period of not to exceed sixty days, proposed regulations for the implementation of subsection (e)(10) of section 4107 of title 38, United States Code (as amended by subsection (a) of this section), subsection (g) of such section, and subsection (h) of such section (as added by subsection (c) of this section).

(2) Not later than 210 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall publish in the Federal Register final regulations for the implementation of such subsections.

SEC. 8. The first sentence of section 5033(a) is amended to read as follows: "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1980 and such sums as may be necesary for fiscal year 1981 and for each of the five succeeding fiscal years.".

EXCHANGE OF MEDICAL INFORMATION WITH STATE VETERANS' HOMES

SEC. 9. Section 5054(b) is amended by inserting "(including State home facilities furnishing domiciliary, nursing home, or hospital care to veterans)" before the period at the end of the first sentence.

REPORT ON THE USE OF FLEXIBLE AND COMPRESSED WORK SCHEDULES BY THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 10. Not later than July 1, 1984, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall submit to Congress a report on the results of the use of flexible and compressed work schedules by the Veterans' Administration. Such report shall include (1) an evaluation of the effects of the use of such schedules on the recruitment and retention of Veterans' Administration employees, on such employees' productivity and morale, and on such employees' effectiveness in carrying out the missions of the Veterans' Administration, and (2) such recommendations for administrative or legislative action, or both, as the Administrator considers appropriate in light of the need for and use of flexible and compressed work schedules by the Veterans' Administration.

In lieu of the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend title 38, United States Code, to enhance recruitment and retention by the Veterans' Administration of nurses and certain other health-care personnel, to improve the Veterans' Administration Health Professional Scholarship Program and certain aspects of other Veterans' Administration health-care programs, and to extend certain expiring Veterans' Administration health-care programs; and for other purposes.".●

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am very pleased to join with the committee chairman, my good friend from Wyoming (Mr. SIMPSON), in urging the Senate to concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 6350. The House amendment is a compromise agreed to between the two Veterans' Affairs Committees after extensive discussion and negotiations. This is an important measure that will improve various aspects of the Veterans' Administration's health-care programs, primarily by enhancing the agency's ability to recruit and retain registered nurses and other health-care personnel.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, H.R. 6350 was first passed by the House on June 15, 1982. On June 21, 1982, the Senate took up S. 2385, the proposed "Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement and Extension Act of 1982," as reported by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs on June 8. The Senate substituted the provisions of that measure in lieu of the provisions of H.R. 6350 as passed by the House and then passed H.R. 6350, returning it to the House. On August 19, the House of Representatives amended the bill with a substitute which represents a compromise agreement reached by the Veterans' Affairs Committees.

I believe that the measure before the Senate represents an equitable resolution of the differences between the two Houses and fairly vindicates the basic position of the Senate on the various matters addressed by the legislation.

In addition, I am pleased that the compromise agreement includes several provisions that I proposed in S. 2389, legislation that I introduced on April 15, 1982. I am very grateful to our committee chairman (Mr. SIMPSON) and the chairman (Mr. MONTGOMERY), and ranking minority member (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT) of our counterpart committee in the House for their cooperation and assistance as we have developed the compromise agreement.

NURSE AND OTHER HEALTH-CARE PERSONNEL

Mr. President, the compromise agreement as it is before the Senate today has a number of provisions that, if enacted, will enable the VA to improve its ability to attract and retain health-care personnel, most particularly nurses.

Mr. President, it is vital that the VA be able to compete effectively in the marketplace with other health-care providers for the services of qualified health-care personnel. The heart of the VA's health-care system is the agency's cadre of trained and motivated health-care personnel. Without sufficient, qualified personnel, the VA cannot provide the quality or quantity of health-care services needed by eligible veterans. At present, the greatest problem that the agency is facing in this regard is in the area of registered nurses.

The factual record developed in Veterans' Affairs Committee hearings is clear: There is a genuine shortage of registered nurses across the country and, as non-Federal health-care providers develop and implement innovative approaches to attract nurses, the VA is at a significant competitive disadvantage. Provisions in the compromise agreement—specifically those providing new flexibility to the agency in areas of pay and scheduling for nurses and other health-care personnel and those making improvements to the VA's health professional scholarship program—should help address the agency's recruitment and retention problems.

According to the VA, as of June 30, 1982, there are nearly 400 beds that are out of use because of the nursing shortage. The agency, which had 987 RN vacancies as of that date, would need to hire at least 228 nurses to put the closed beds back into circulation. This legislation will help the VA fill those nurse vacancies and get those beds back into operation.

PAY AND WORK SCHEDULES

Mr. President, the compromise agreement contains two provisions—based on provisions included in the Senate amendment and derived from my bill, S. 2389—that would give the VA greater flexibility to compete in the areas of pay and work scheduling. First, the VA would be given authority to extend the period for which additional pay is paid for service on a weekend so as to include service on a Saturday. Second, the VA would be given authority to use the so-called "Baylor Plan," under which nurses could work two 12-hour shifts during a weekend and generally receive pay and benefits on the same basis as if they had worked 40 hours.

With reference to the new weekend pay authority, the provision in the compromise agreement, if enacted, will enable the agency to be more competitive with non-VA health-care facilities that currently offer additional pay to nurses for the entire weekend. Under the provision in the compromise agreement, the Administrator will have maximum flexibility in terms of specifying the hours on a Saturday for which such additional pay could be paid and the rate of such pay, up to the rate specified in law for work on a Sunday—which is currently a rate of 25 percent of base pay.

I want to emphasize that the exercise of both of these new authorities is discretionary with the Administrator. Neither would be required to be exercised and, in fact, the authorities could be utilized only when determined necessary to improve the agency's ability to recruit or retain needed personnel. Thus, even though the VA is experiencing serious nursing shortages at various locations in the system, it seems likely that neither of these authorities would be used immediately throughout the system. Rather, it is contemplated that the Administrator authorize the use of one or both authorities, as appropriate, at those locations where there are recruitment or retention difficulties because of competitive pressures from non-VA facilities in the same geographic area.

Mr. President, in addition to the provisions I have just outlined relating to new pay and work-scheduling authorities, there are several provisions in the compromise agreement—derived from the Senate amendment and S. 2389—relating to certain VA health-care personnel pay authorities enacted in Public Law 96-330 in 1980. Under those authorities, the Administrator may, when necessary to recruit or retain certain health-care personnel, modify statutorty rates of additional pay—such as for overtime work or work on a Sunday or holiday—for nurses on a facility-by-facility basis and modify rates of basic pay for nurses and other VA direct health-care personnel on a local, regional, or nationwide basis. Provisions in the compromise agreement would extend the first authority—the additional-pay authority for nurses—so as to permit modifications to be made on an other-than-local basis.

Also, as to both these authorities, as well as the new authority to utilize "Baylor Plan" scheduling, the Administrator would be required, within 120 days after the date of enactment of the bill, to publish for public review and comment proposed regulations to implement those authorities and, within 300 days after the date of enactment, to publish final regulations. This latter requirement is included in order to promote full and effective use of the various authorities which, in turn, should enhance the agency's ability to compete with private sector health-care facilities. The deadlines for these regulations were 90 and 210 days, respectively, in the Senate amendment. The additional time provided in the compromise agreement is for the purpose of enabling the VA to develop proposed regulations and fully to take into account the views of all parties before publishing final regulations. The committees have made clear, however, that they expect the VA to work to promulgate the implementing regulations as quickly as possible and not take the full period allowed.

One provision in H.R. 6350 as passed by the Senate relating to pay and scheduling flexibility is not included in the compromise agreement. Under the Senate amendment, as proposed in S. 2389, the Administrator would have been authorized to use flexitime or compressed work schedules, as described in regulations and guidelines that were issued under the Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1978, Public Law 95-390, for nurses and other direct health-care personnel. This provision is not included in the compromise agreement. The reason for this deletion—as is discussed more fully in the "Explanatory Statement" that the chairman of the committee (Mr. SIMPSON) has printed in the RECORD as part of his remarks and which was printed in the RECORD in identical form by the chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, Representative MONTGOMERY, during the debate on the compromise agreement in the other body—is the recent enactment of Public Law 97-221, the Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1982, which provides Government-wide authority to utilize alternative work schedules. However, because of the committees' strong interest in the results of the VA's use of this authority on the agency's recruitment and retention efforts, the compromise agreement includes the Senate provision requiring the Administrator to report, not later than July 1, 1985, on the VA's experience of the Government-wide authority.

HEALTH PROFESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

Mr. President, as I noted earlier, the other aspect of the compromise agreement that should enhance the VA's ability to recruit and retain qualified health-care personnel pertains to the agency's health professional scholarship program.

This program, established in 1980 by Public Law 96-330, is available for use by the VA for physicians, nurses, and certain other health-care personnel, but has been used by the agency thus far only for nurses. Provisions in the compromise agreement, derived from the Senate amendment and S. 2389 as well as S. 2385 as introduced by our distinguished chairman (Mr. SIMPSON), would enable the VA to permit current full-time employees to participate in the program while continuing to work for the agency on either a full- or part-time basis. This change would allow the program to be used by VA registered nurses who are desirous of pursuing training for a baccalaureate or advanced degree or by other VA health-care personnel, such as licensed practical or vocational nurses, who are interested in pursuing training to become RN's. Such current employees would thus be made eligible for financial assistance from the VA—tuition and stipend assistance for those working on a part-time basis—while pursuing part-time training. At the completion of their training—which would have to be on at least a half-time basis—these employees would be obligated to remain with the VA for further periods.

The legislation as passed by the Senate included a provision that would have provided that funds appropriated for making payments to scholarship program participants would remain available until expended, which would have had the effect of enabling the VA to enter multi-year commitments with program participants and thereby make the scholarship program more attractive to prospective applicants. As is explained in more detail in the "Explanatory Statement" I mentioned earlier, this provision is not included in the compromise agreement. I am satisfied, however, that as a result of the discussions involving staff from the Veterans' Affairs and Appropriations Committees, the need for program stability has been fully recognized by the Appropriations Committees and will be addressed by those committees in future appropriations activity.

CHAMPVA ELIGIBILITY RESTORATION

Mr. President, the compromise agreement contains a provision to ensure continuing Federal health-care eligibility for CHAMPVA beneficiaries—the spouses and children of veterans with total, permanent service-connected disabilities and of those who die from service-connected disabilities or who, at the time of death, had total, permanent service connected disabilities. Under current law, these family members and survivors lose their CHAMPVA eligibility when they become eligible for medicare and generally lose needed Federal health-care assistance when they exhaust any part of their medicare coverage. Under the compromise agreement, as provided in the Senate amendment and S. 2389, when a former CHAMPVA beneficiary exhausts any of his or her medicare benefits, he or she would again become eligible for CHAMPVA benefits and would not thereafter lose CHAMPVA eligibility by reacquiring medicare eligibility. As a result of this change, such a spouse, surviving spouse, or child previously eligible for medical care under CHAMPVA would no longer be confronted with the present inequitable situation in which he or she has no Federal health-care coverage.

EXTENSIONS OF CERTAIN EXPIRING AUTHORITIES

Mr. President, the compromise agreement includes provisions to extend two expiring authorities.

These provisions would:

First, extend by 4 years as proposed in the Senate amendment—through fiscal year 1986—the authorization of appropriations for the VA program of matching grants to States to construct, expand, remodel, or alter State veterans' home health-care facilities. State veterans' homes provide a cost-effective alternative to VA facilities for the provision of long-term care to veterans, and I thus consider this extension highly desirable. With further reference to the State veterans' home program, a provision in the compromise agreement includes, as provided in the Senate amendment an express reference to State veterans' homes as part of the surrounding medical community eligible to participate with the VA in programs through which VA facilities, particularly in remote areas, make available to others in the local medical community, for a fee, VA educational resources and VA electronic communications capability linking such VA facilities to major medical centers.

Second, extend for 1 year—until September 30, 1983—the VA's authority to provide, on a contract basis in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and other territories of the United States, hospital care for non-service-connected disabilities and outpatient treatment to obviate the need for hospitalization for such disabilities. With reference to this extension of the VA's authority to provide medical care on a contract basis to certain veterans in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, I want to underscore the point made in the "Explanatory Statement" that this extension is a stop-gap action and that it is important that a permanent approach to the VA's providing appropriate and cost-effective health care in these two locations be developed expeditiously. The "Explanatory Statement" specifies a December 1, 1982, deadline for the VA to provide the committees with a comprehensive plan on this matter. I will be giving the proposed plan careful consideration as soon as it is submitted.

CONTRACT CARE FOR WOMEN VETERANS

Mr. President, the compromise agreement does not contain a provision that was included in the measure as passed by the Senate that would have authorized the VA to provide certain outpatient care—pre- or post-hospitalization care and care necessary to obviate the need for hospitalization—on a fee-for-service basis for a non-service-connected, gender-related disability of a woman veteran when the VA is unable to provide appropriate care. As is discussed in more detail in the "Explanatory Statement," this provision is not included in the compromise agreement because of a concern that providing fee-for-service authority might prove counterproductive to the need for the agency to enhance its in-house staff capacity to meet the gender-related needs of women veterans. I want to stress my concern that the existing authorities discussed in the "Explanatory Statement" that an individual VA facility can rely on at present when it does not have a current capacity to provide needed care to an otherwise eligible woman veteran—specifically the authorities in sections 4117 and 5053 of title 38—may result in long delays in certain instances in the provision of needed care to women veterans. In this regard, I will insert in the RECORD a letter, with deletions so as to respect the veteran's privacy interests, which describes the difficulties one woman veteran had in getting care from the VA for what was later discovered to be a serious gynecological disorder. I urge the VA's Chief Medical Director to look into the efforts undertaken around the VA system at present to meet the health-care needs of women veterans so as to insure that otherwise eligible women veterans receive appropriate care for gender-related disabilities on a timely basis.

Mr. President, I ask that the expurgated text of the letter I just mentioned be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The letter referred to follows:

JULY 15, 1982.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: I am writing this letter in the hopes that your office may be able to shed some light on the problems of women who have served in the Armed Forces, and are currently residing at the California Veterans Home, in Yountville. The problem can best be explained by pointing up one particular case, that was experiencing what she thought were serious gynecological disorders, and went to the Veterans Home medical facility, requesting a doctor's attention. She was told that there were no Gynecologists on staff and it would benefit her to see a physician at the Veterans Administration Medical Center. She then pursued that avenue and found there were no GYN's in any VA facility in all of Northern California. Palo Alto VAMC did say that they had a GYN on consultation, but it would be months of getting nowhere, the administration at the Veterans Home told her to go to a private doctor in town at her own expense. Fortunately, being retired from the Army, she was entitled to be seen and treated at Letterman Army Hospital. They discovered Cancer, and operated to remove most of it on June 15, 1982. Whether or not the cancer could have been treated if detected earlier may never be known. My concern, as well as is what about the thousands of women in Northern California who may have gynecological problems but do not have the advantage of being retired from the service? Those women who served their country when needed and now may need their country? The women residents of the California Veterans Home, who are being told to wait for the VAMC to get a GYN or go to a Doctor at their own expense, when they barely can afford the essentials?

It is my hope that you may be able to get answers to these questions, answers that might give hope to those veterans who are already feeling rejected by their country, state and Veterans Administration.

As a veteran myself, I have always been pleased with the work and dedication you have shown the veterans of California and the country, and I thank you.

Sincerely,

——— ———,
Assistant,
Veteran Service Officer.

CONCLUSION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as I noted earlier, I believe that the compromise agreement represents a fair resolution of the differences between the two measures passed by the two bodies and will contribute substantially to the provision of quality VA health-care services. Thus, I commend this compromise to the Senate and urge my colleagues to give it their full support.

In closing, I would like to express my appreciation to the chairman (Mr. SIMPSON) and the other members of the committee for their cooperation and assistance as we have worked to develop this measure. I also want to thank my good friends on the House committee, the chairman, Representative MONTGOMERY, and ranking minority member, Representative HAMMERSCHMIDT, for their usual fine work and cooperation. It has been, as always, a pleasure working with them. The compromise measure has true bipartisan support in both Houses.

Mr. President, I also want to express my thanks to the staff members of the House Committee who played key roles in the development of the compromise agreement, Mack Fleming, Rufus Wilson, Ralph Casteel, and Jack McDonell; to Robert Cover, assistant counsel, House Legislative Counsel's office, and to the members of our committee staff; Tom Harvey, Julie Susman, and Koreen Kelleher, who left the staff in July, on the majority side, for their excellent work and cooperation on this measure, committee editorial director, Harold Carter and his assistant, James MacRae, who so ably provide editorial support to the committee, and, on the minority side, Bill Brew, Ed Scott, Jon Steinberg, Katy Burdick, Charlotte Hughes, and Ingrid Post.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the compromise agreement.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

VA'S CHIEF MEDICAL DIRECTOR MAKES GOOD SENSE ON VETERANS' HEALTH CARE

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, at the recent national convention of the Disabled American Veterans in Las Vegas, Nev., the Veterans' Administration's Chief Medical Director, Dr. Donald L. Custis, delivered a very instructive speech to the convention about the VA health-care system. I believe that Dr. Custis' views deserve the serious attention of my colleagues and others concerned about health care in the VA and in the United States generally.

Mr. President, so that my colleagues may have the benefit of Dr. Custis' views, I ask that a verbatim transcript of Dr. Custis' remarks to the DAV National Convention be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The transcript as follows:

REMARKS OF DR. DONALD L. CUSTIS

Thank you, Sherman, and my congratulations to you for your outstanding accomplishments as national commander. And Congressman Edgar, if I had any sense after that outstanding address, I would sit down.

Distinguished guests, members of the DAV and Auxiliary, yesterday while flying to Las Vegas, I read the July issue of the DAV Magazine, and from the tenor and the temper of some of the articles there, I was persuaded to open my remarks with the story of the African hunter. The hunter got separated from his safari, and he wandered through the jungle for several days until hungry and enervated, he began to realize that he was lost.

He became hysterical, and he said, "Oh, Lord, hear me; oh, Lord, save me; oh, Lord, lead me out of the jungle." Whereupon, he came face to face with a roaring lion. Now, can you give us a roar? (Laughter) Not as ferocious as I thought. The hunter fell to his knees and shouted, "Oh, Lord, make me a Christian," and the lion roared and shouted, 'Oh, Lord, bless this food I'm about to eat." (Laughter)

Last year I spent a lot of time writing what I thought was a very good speech, which I read to you. I think the measure of its merit was attested to by the fact that I lost you in the first ten minutes. I won't perpetrate that again. What I would like to do instead is spend a few minutes talking to you extemporaneously and from the heart.

And speaking of heart, I would up front commend a man who is heavily endowed with heart, our own Gabby Hartnett. (Applause) Believe me, it is a pleasure to work with Gabby and his staff. They have got class. They know their work, and they have got it all together, and I am sure that you are as proud of them as they are of the DAV.

Their concern for veterans is a reflection of the empathy which pervades the DAV. You show it day after day in the unselfish volunteer service you provide to our veterans in our hospitals.

Both Commander Roodzant and Gabby, writing in that issue of DAV Magazine, have reminded you that veterans' benefits are under attack. I lift the following sentence out of Gabby's article, quote: "The danger is real, very real. You must fight to save your benefits. And to that I say amen.

And I would like to focus down on the threats to that particular benefit called the veterans' health care delivery system. You have stood sentinel over that system for years, and you are very good at it. Your interest in the veterans' health care system is more than that of a consumer; you are also a proprietor.

The system is largely what you have made it. You have created not only an outstanding health care system for your fellow veterans, but you have also provided the nation with an outstanding asset. The veterans' health care system, to my mind, is a critical element in national security. It is today the most on-line contingency backup to military medicine that exists.

The veterans' health care system today is the nation's main resource for health manpower production. There is no substitute for that function. I know there are flaws in the system. We work on them every day, but let me tell you something. I also know firsthand the many elements that go to make up the pluralistic, public, private, voluntary health care delivery systems that have made American medicine the envy of the world.

I have practiced in the private sector. I have worked in community hospitals. I have worked in university hospitals. I have served in military hospitals, and now I work in the VA, and by comparison, let me tell you that your health care system is damn good. (Applause)

And I can only admonish you to cherish it and defend it and hang on to that dogged conviction that it is worth saving.

What are these dangers, these threats besetting VA medicine? I think first and foremost the threat stems from the fact that we are an integral part of the American health care scene, a $260- to $270 billion industry that is economically out of control. It has over a period of the last several years had an inflation rate sometimes double that of the Consumer Price Index.

If some means is not found to bring under control this escalating cost of medical care, it more than anything else is going to compromise our ability to provide the quantity and the quality of care that the veteran so richly deserves. So far the Congress has found no incentives, has written no legislation providing incentives for cost control.

Instead, they have reverted once more to caps, cuts, and pending capitation vouchering for Medicare, all of this cost shifting in the guise of cost containment. But the promise continues that the system will be redesigned, and there will be a new financial base provided.

Whatever form that takes, and right now all of these systems are in turmoil, in search of that redesign, you can be sure that veterans who have never before used our system are no longer going to be able to afford the increased differentials and surcharges that will be attendant upon Medicare and Medicaid.

The impact on the system will be more demand, aggravating the dilemma we have been struggling with for five or six years; namely, of increased demand in the face of ever-diminishing resources. There will be another impact—we are seeing it already—as federal subsidy to medical schools declines, our affiliate hospitals and universities will be the more dependent upon the VA system as a teaching base.

As we undergo this redesign, beware, beware of these danger signs: The threat for mainstreaming. We have seen it surface in the last two years in Portland, in Minneapolis, in Baltimore, all cities where there is an oversupply of physicians, the vanguard of a situation where there will be a glut of physicians in the country by the year 1990.

They are hungry and they would like nothing better than to see the high profit, acute care bled from the VA system. They are in no position, they are not interested, they are not capable of providing the full continuum of care, just that acute care. Should that ever happen, it would so disturb our patient mix that our ability to continue to provide a teaching base for health manpower would be gone, and with it our ability to attract quality health professionals into the system and retain them would be gone. It would be the beginning of a reversion to an old soldiers' and sailors' home system so well remembered from the 1930s.

Beware of mandated contracting out. Medical care, if it is to have quality, must be a team effort, and those who would fragment the management authority over that team would destroy the system. Just two weeks ago, I heard, of all places, an outstanding geriatrician from Philadelphia testifying before the House VA Committee, recommending that because the VA health care system was so manifestly good at providing extended care, they should exclusively, we should exclusively concern ourselves with extended care and let the acute care pass to the private sector.

Those who would advocate this are either ignorant of the implication or they know it full well and have the ulterior motive to destroy your health care system.

Beware of attacks on affiliation. I tell you that our affiliation program is our chief guarantor of continued quality.

Beware of slander in the media. Never has a health care system suffered from so much inaccurate, unfair, lousy press.

And beware of the specious argument that somehow the nonservice-connected veteran, the needy, medically needy nonservice-connected veteran somehow is not entitled to care in the system. This system cannot exist caring only for service-connected.

Ladies and gentlemen, the best answer to competition is not just a defensive stance, but also an aggressive pursuit of improving what we do, and that is what our Medical District Initiated Program Planning—MEDIPP—is all about, our grass-roots planning effort. It is an effort to control change, to identify where improvement in care and facilities for care are needed, based on an updated demography of the veteran.

We need to identify a better resource distribution methodology. We need to improve our productivity. We need to step up our preparation for the aging veteran. Let me digress a minute and tell you the magnitude of that impact. During the 20th century, life expectancy in these United States has been increased from 48 years to 73 years. If everyone who ever lived beyond the age of 65 since the birth of Christ—let me repeat that: Of all human beings since the birth of Christ, whoever lived beyond the age of 65, one-half of them are alive today.

During the 20th century the incidence of over-65 has increased from three percent to 12 percent. By the year 1990, 35 percent of all veterans will be over the age of 65, and in 1990 of all living males over the age of 65, 60 percent of them will be veterans. We are talking about you and me down the road. And our needs at that time for acute care will be three times the need we ever experienced before.

We need clearly to regain our role in, leading role in rehabilitation, and we will. We need to find the ultimate answer to Agent Orange, and we will. We need to keep pace with the exploding technology in medicine, with automation of clinical services, with facility replacement and renovation, and all of this is going to take money, lots, of money.

The point is, we can and we will do it more economically than our competition. (Applause) As Sherm Roodzant would say, we have promises to keep. Working together, I have no doubt as to the continued integrity and durability of the VA health care system, just as I have no doubt of the continuous advancement of medicine itself.

Never has there been a period in medicine when the future looked so bright. There is within medicine somewhere, beneath the pessimism and discouragement resulting from the disarray of our health care systems and their stupendous costs, an undercurrent of almost outrageous optimism about what may lie ahead for the eradication of human disease, if not indeed an understanding of the nature and the meaning of life itself.

I thank you, and God bless the DAV.●

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN INDIAN LANDS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the Senate S. 503, Calendar Order No. 725.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 503) to authorize the purchase, sale, and exchange of lands by the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

SECTION 1. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, is vigorously pursuing its goal of self-determination through development of manufacturing and farming enterprises; and

(2) the continued existence of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, as a permanent homeland of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe and as a necessary foundation for continued self-determination requires that the Secretary of the Interior have authority to—

(A) consolidate and increase the trust land base in the reservation for the tribe and individual tribal members, and

(B) prevent further loss of trust land.

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to—

(2) sell or approve sales of any interest in tribal trust or tribal restricted land (or any improvements thereon) located within the boundaries of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation but only if additional tribal trust or tribal restricted land which is approximately equal in acreage or value to the interest sold is acquired by the Secretary at the time of such sale; and

(3) exchange any interest in tribal or individual trust land or tribal or individual restricted land (or any improvements thereon) for any land located within the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation but only if the values of the interests in land involved in such an exchange are equal or are equalized by the payment of money.

(b) Any purchase of Federal lands under subsection (a)(1) shall be made in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 2744).

SEC. 3. The Secretary shall accept any transfer of title from the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, or from any individual member of such tribe, for any interest in land (or any improvements thereon) located within the boundaries of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, and shall take title to such property in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, or for such individual member.

SEC. 4. Any acquisition, sale, or exchange of lands for the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe which is made under this Act shall be made only upon the request of the authorized governing body of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, subject to the limitations and procedures of the tribal constitution.

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding any other provision of applicable law, the title to any interest in land, or any improvements thereon, acquired by the Secretary under this Act shall be acquired in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe or an individual member of such tribe, as the case may be, and such property shall be held and treated in the same manner as other trust or restricted Indian lands are held and treated under Federal law.

SEC. 6. Money or amounts credited to the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe from the sale or exchange under this Act of any interest in trust or restricted land (or any improvements thereon) may be used only for the purpose of purchasing or acquiring property under this Act and shall be deposited in a special account under the control of the Secretary or his duly authorized representative.

SEC. 7. Subsection (a) of the first section of the Act of August 9, 1955 (69 Stat. 539; 25 U.S.C. 415), as amended, is further amended—

(1) by striking out "and leases of land on the Agua Caliente" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "leases of land on the Agua Caliente", and

(2) by striking out "and the lands comprising the Moses Allotment Numbered 10, Chelan County, Washington," in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "leases of the lands comprising the Moses Allotment Numbered 10, Chelan County, Washington, and leases to the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, or any organization of such tribe, of land on the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation,".

SEC. 8. (a)(1) A person who is not an enrolled member of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe shall not be entitled to receive by devise or descent any interest in trust or restricted land located within the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, if—

(A) the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe files with the Secretary notice of intent to purchase such interest, and

(B) while the decedent's estate is pending before the administrative law judge, the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe purchases such interest by paying to the Secretary for the benefit of such person an amount equal to the fair market value of such interest (as determined by the Secretary after appraisal).

(2) Within ninety days after the date on which the Secretary receives payment of an amount for the benefit of a person under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall pay such amount to such person.

(b)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a), if—

(A) the spouse of the decedent is not an enrolled member of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, and

(B) such spouse would, but for this section, acquire by devise or descent an interest in trust or restricted land located within the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, and

(C) the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe files with the Secretary notice of intent to purchase such interest, and the spouse shall have a life estate in such interest and the remainder of such interest shall pass to the heirs of the decedent who are alive on the date of death of the spouse of the decedent (on a per capita basis).

(D) the spouse of the decedent elects the application of this subsection.

(2) The passing of any remainder interest under paragraph (1) shall be subject to the provisions of subsection (a).

(c) On request of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, the administrative law judge shall keep an estate pending for not less than two years from the date of the decendent's death.

(d) In any case in which the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe acts under subsection (a) to purchase an interest in trust or restricted land and such interest is encumbered by a spousal life estate, the value of such life estate shall be reflected in the appraisal of the Secretary made under subsection (a)(1).

(e) This section shall only apply to interests included in the estates of decedents dying on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 9. The Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, is hereby declared the permanent homeland of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe.

SEC. 10. The Secretary is authorized to take such action as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, S. 503 was introduced by the senior Senator from North Dakota, Senator BURDICK. The purpose of S. 503 is to permit consolidation of landholdings on the reservation, reduce instances of fractionated heirship in trust lands, and to provide lands for tribal programs designed to improve the economy of the tribe. S. 503 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to acquire land or improvements within the reservation for the tribe or individual members and also authorizes the Secretary to sell any trust land, provided that new trust land is acquired at the time of such sale. It also authorizes the exchange of trust land for other lands within the reservation.

S. 503 tracks many of the provisions of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934. However, this legislation is required because the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, many years ago, voted to exclude itself from the application of that act. A unique feature of S. 503, however, is a limitation placed upon the right of inheritance of trust property within the reservation by persons who are not members of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe. This limitation is conditioned on the payment by the tribe to the heir or devisee of the fair market value of property.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, a major feature of this legislation is a restriction on the right of nonmembers of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe to inherit trust lands of deceased tribal members. Under the provisions of section 8 of the bill the tribe is given the right to purchase the trust lands of a deceased member if such lands would otherwise be acquired by a nonmember by devise or inheritance. However, this right of acquisition is modified to the extent that if the nonmember is the surviving spouse, then such nonmember is given the right to elect a life estate in the property and the remainder interest in the property shall descend by operation of law to the heirs of the decedent who are members of the tribe on a per capita basis.

Since this bill was reported out of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe has requested a minor modification in the provisions of this section. I am therefore offering an amendment by way of a substitute for the bill reported out of the select committee. This amendment alters the provisions of section 8 of the bill to provide that in those situations where the tribe notifies a surviving nonmember spouse that it desires to exercise its right to purchase, the surviving spouse may elect a life estate and may convey the remainder interest to any heir of the decedent who is a member of the tribe. I believe this amendment will provide additional protection against further fractionation of these land holdings and also greater protection to surviving nonmember spouses.

In addition, there is a technical amendment to section 2 of the bill to make clear that nothing in this bill authorizes any new appropriation or expenditure of funds other than is presently authorized by law.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I have reviewed the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague and I recommend that it be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, is there a committee substitute at the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a committee substitute.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Chair put the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1260

(Purpose: To provide a committee substitute making technical amendments)

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. BURDICK, I send an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), on behalf of Mr. BURDICK, proposes an unprinted amendment in the nature of a substitute numbered 1260.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, is vigorously pursuing its goal of self-determination through development of manufacturing and farming enterprises; and

(2) the continued existence of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, as a permanent homeland of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe and as a necessary foundation for continued self-determination requires that the Secretary of the Interior have authority to—

(A) consolidate and increase the trust land base in the reservation for the tribe and individual tribal members; and

(B) prevent further loss of trust land.

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to—

(1) purchase with any funds held by the Secretary in trust for the benefit of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe or appropriated for the purpose, or acquire by gift, exchange, or relinquishment, any interest in land (or any improvements thereon) located within the boundaries of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation for the benefit of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe or individual members of such tribe;

(2) sell or approve sales of any interest in tribal trust or tribal restricted land (or any improvements thereon) located within the boundaries of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation but only if additional tribal trust or tribal restricted land which is approximately equal in acreage or value to the interest sold is acquired by the Secretary at the time of such sale; and

(3) exchange any interest in tribal or individual trust land or tribal or individual restricted land (or any improvements thereon) for any land located within the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation but only if the values of the interests in land involved in such an exchange are equal or are equalized by the payment of money.

(b) any purchase of Federal lands under subsection (a)(1) shall be made in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 2744).

SEC. 3. The Secretary shall accept any transfer of title from the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, or from any individual member of such tribe, for any interest in land (or any improvements thereon) located within the boundaries of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, and shall take title to such property in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, or for such individual member.

SEC. 4. Any acquisition, sale, or exchange of lands for the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe which is made under this Act shall be made only upon the request of the authorized governing body of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, subject to the limitations and procedures of the tribal constitution.

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding any other provision of applicable law, the title to any interest in land, or any improvements thereon, acquired by the Secretary under this Act shall be acquired in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe or an individual member of such tribe, as the case may be, and such property shall be held and treated in the same manner as other trust or restricted Indian lands are held and treated under Federal law.

SEC. 6. Money or amounts credited to the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe from the sale or exchange under this Act of any interest in trust or restricted land (or any improvements thereon) may be used only for the purpose of purchasing or acquiring property under this Act and shall be deposited in a special account under the control of the Secretary or his duly authorized representative.

SEC. 7. Subsection (a) of the first section of the Act of August 9, 1955 (69 Stat. 539; 25 U.S.C. 415), as amended, is further amended—

(1) by striking out "and leases of land on the Agua Caliente" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "leases of land on the Agua Caliente", and

(2) by striking out "and the lands comprising the Moses Allotment Numbered 10, Chelan County, Washington," in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "leases of the lands comprising the Moses Allotment Numbered 10, Chelan County, Washington, and leases to the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe, or any organization of such tribe, of land on the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation,".

SEC. 8. (a)(1) The devise or descent of any interest in trust or restricted land located within the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation to any person who is not a member of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe shall be subject to the right of such tribe to purchase such interest within 2 years of the date of death of the decedent by paying to the Secretary for the benefit of such person an amount equal to the fair market value of such interest on the date of such purchase (as determined by the Secretary after appraisal).

(2) Within ninety days after the date on which the Secretary receives payment of an amount for the benefit of a person under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall pay such amount to such person.

(3) The Devils Lake Sioux Tribe may exercise its right under paragraph (1) to purchase the interest of a person only if the governing body of such tribe notifies such person and the Secretary of the intent of such tribe to purchase such interest at least 90 days prior to the date of such purchase.

(b)(1) Subsection (a) shall not apply to any interest in land acquired by the spouse of a decedent if—

(A) the spouse elects the application of this subsection prior to the date which is 90 days after the date on which the governing body of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe notifies the spouse of its intent to acquire such interest, and

(B) prior to such date, the spouse retains a life estate in such interest and conveys the remainder of such interest to any heir of the decendent who is a member of such tribe.

(2) If the spouse of a decedent elects the application of this subsection with respect to any interest in land which was trust or restricted land immediately prior to the death of the decedent, the life estate and the remainder of such interest created by the conveyance described in paragraph (1) (B) shall acquire such trust or restricted status.

(c) This section shall only apply to interests included in the estates of decedents dying on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 9. The Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, is hereby declared the permanent homeland of the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe.

SEC. 10. The Secretary is authorized to take such action as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment (UP No. 1260) was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

VIRGIN ISLANDS NONIMMIGRANT ALIEN ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3517, Calendar No. 766.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3517) to authorize the granting of permanent residence status to certain nonimmigrant aliens residing in the Virgin islands of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment:

On page 7, line 2, strike "States.", and insert the following: States other than for employment as an entertainer or as an athlete and for a period not exceeding forty-five days.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that the Immigration and Naturalization Service will incur costs of $100,000 in fiscal year 1983 as a result of the enactment of this bill. H.R. 3517 might appear to require the provision of new budget authority to cover these costs. This is not the intent of the Judiciary Committee; the committee intends that the costs of implementing H.R. 3517 be absorbed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Also, H.R. 3517 is not intended to "drive up" the agency's future budget request to cover these costs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MIGRATORY-BIRD HUNTING AND CONSERVATION STAMP CONTEST

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill, S. 2874, on behalf of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2874) to amend the act of March 16, 1934, as amended, to credit entrance fees for the migratory-bird hunting and conservation stamp contest to the account which pays for the administration of the contest, which was read the first time by title and the second time at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2874) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act of March 16, 1934, as amended (16 U.S.C. 718, et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following section:

"SEC. 10. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, moneys received by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in the form of fees for entering the migratory-bird hunting and conservation stamp contest shall be credited first to the appropriation account from which expenditures for the administration of such contest are made, and second, to the extent such moneys exceed the expenditures for administration of the contest, to the migratory-bird conservation fund.".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have four nominations that have been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary earlier today which I believe have been cleared on both sides.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes; they have, Mr. President. Under great pressure, I reluctantly agreed to clear them on this side; but I found great difficulty in withstanding the pressure upon me, especially the pressure that came from the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND).

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am more familiar with that than perhaps any other Member in the Chamber.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. God save the King and Senator BAKER, along with the King. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, after that colloquy, which perhaps only Members of the Senate will understand and, more especially, only Members of the leadership will appreciate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering the four nominations, which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

THE JUDICIARY

Thomas F. Hogan, of Maryland, to the U.S. district judge for the District of Columbia.

Alex Kozinski, of the District of Columbia, to be a judge of the U.S. Claims Court for a term of 15 years.

Ross T. Roberts, of Missouri, to be U.S. district judge for the Western District of Missouri.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Raymond J. Dearie, of New York, to be U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of New York for the term of 4 years.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider en bloc the votes by which the nominations were confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

THE CRISIS IN POLAND

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I should again like to speak to my distinguished colleagues on the crisis in Poland and on some of the profound effects on the people of that country. Poland's economy, political climate, and human rights situation have deteriorated drastically since the imposition of martial law on December 13 of last year.

In large part, the first half of this year in Poland may be characterized as the economy's reaction to import curbs and economic restrictions. Overall imports from the West to Poland are down 42.3 percent from last year. Industrial production under martial law is suffering, especially in those industries depending on imports from the West. Martial law has had a notable effect on the working population. Production per worker has dropped 2.7 percent in the last 6 months. One can expect this figure to increase if the conditions many Poles are forced to work under are taken into account. Close to half the 16 million work force labor under unsafe conditions and some 300,000 of these work in conditions that are very harmful to their health.

According to the Polish Government's central statistics office, real personal income has fallen by 26 percent and the inflation rate is up over 100 percent so far this year. The difficulties created by martial law have caused the supply of goods to dwindle and have even compelled the ruling junta to begin rationing items such as footwear and socks.

The agricultural picture is no better under General Jaruzelski's government. With their stockpile of fodder steadily deteriorating there will soon be a reduction in the livestock herd. The rationing of meat has been in effect for some time. Agriculture received 50 percent less fodder this year than last. Hog and chicken breeding and large-scale egg production have nearly come to a halt. The procurement of these items has dropped by 60 percent.

Poland consumes 6 million tons of grain annually. At best, they will produce 1.8 million tons this year. If it were not for the many humanitarian assistance programs originating in the United States the basic needs of 4 to 5 million Poles would very likely go unattended at the hands of the military government and many would face possible starvation. The Catholic Relief Service, Care, and Project Hope have been directly responsible for the continued well-being of this segment of the population. I cannot stress enough the need for this aid or the importance of it continuing to reach the Polish people.

The Soviet Union must be held accountable for their role in creating the martial law conditions in Poland. The sanctions imposed by President Reagan on Poland and the Soviet Union have in large part helped to create a net financial flow from Poland to the West. This has forced the Soviet Union to transfer significant amounts of real resources to Poland in an attempt to head off further deterioration of the Polish economy and avoid a popular uprising against the junta.

The Soviet Union has now put their own people to work in Polish factories to keep an eye on operations. This is obviously a tool that has been implemented by the Soviets in an attempt to deter Solidarity or any union activity. At the same time many Solidarity members are being pressured to emigrate. Large numbers have been fired from their jobs after having been released from detention camps. According to Polish press reports, several have been repeatedly beaten by police. In one such related incident, when a former Solidarity regional leadership member refused to work as an informer for the political police he was told that he could meet with an accident. Eventually he was pressured into emigrating. Many of those who stood up to the pressure have simply been sent back to prison. Furthermore, the Catholic church in Poland has been warned by authorities to cut their ties with Solidarity or face the possibility of raids which will uncover evidence implicating them in a "conspiracy" with Solidarity leaders.

The 31st of this month marks the second anniversary of the Gdansk Agreements whereby the Polish Government recognized the independent trade union's right to exist. As my distinguished colleagues know, this right was suspended on the 13th of December with the imposition of martial law. Solidarity has called for nationwide demonstrations on this day. Already this week we have seen numerous outbursts of public discontent in Poland's major cities.

For the coming weeks and months, this Congress must watch events closely and with great interest, as I hope all Americans will. I believe my colleagues should support President Reagan in this area until there is an abrogation of martial law, a readmission of Solidarity into the decisionmaking process, and persons sentenced or interned because of their relationship to Solidarity are released.

I support the President's policy of sanctions because I feel it represents the most credible means of letting the Soviets, and the Polish Government, know of our concern and interest in the welfare of the Polish people and their right to form independent trade unions. I call on my colleagues to do the same.

THE UNITED STATES-CHINA JOINT COMMUNIQUE

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, many of us in the Senate are concerned about the United States-Mainland China communique which was issued earlier this week.

I have always believed that international peace and stability could be enhanced by improved relations between the United States and Mainland China. However, I also feel that this cannot occur at the expense of our long-term friendship with Taiwan and that nation's legitimate defense concerns. After a careful study of the communique, the President's accompanying statement, and meeting personally with the President, some of my concerns have been alleviated while others have not.

The communique states that the United States "appreciates Mainland China's recent reunification proposals and contends that they have created a "new situation." I am strongly in favor of encouraging a decrease in tensions between Taiwan and China, and I believe the communique could serve a constructive role in convincing Beijing and Taipei that they should begin to talk seriously about their differences. Nevertheless, I feel we should not laud the Chinese position on reunification while ignoring the Taiwanese side.

The communique also states that the "U.S. Government does not seek to carry out a long-term policy of arms sales to Taiwan," and that it does intend "to reduce gradually its sales of arms to Taiwan, leading over a period of time to a final resolution." This crucial U.S. concession to a long-standing Chinese demand has been made in return for Chinese agreement to language saying that "striving for peaceful reunification" is a "fundamental policy" of their government. It is important that the Chinese have publically stated their desire to settle their problems with Taiwan peacefully. However, I fear we have now unwisely raised Chinese hopes for an eventual arms cut off and probably altered the Chinese demand from if arms will be cut off to when we will stop selling arms to Taiwan.

The assurances President Reagan made in his statement and the meeting I attended concerning our moral commitment to Taiwan were reassuring to my concerns about Taiwan's security. I applaud the agreement on the continued coproduction of the F5E fighter plane which President Reagan sent to Congress this week. The President personally assured me that if the PRC develops and deploys fighter planes with all-weather offensive capability, we will be morally obligated to provide Taiwan with the same capability. I feel it would be ideal if these statements and the six assurances U.S. Ambassador Lilly gave to the Chiang Ching-Kuo, the President of Taiwan, in July would be issued in a single written statement.

It is obvious that this communique will not be totally satisfactory to the interested parties. In future times of tension, each nation will interpret it as they wish. Unfortunately, there seems to be little alternative to the ambiguity of this communique when one is dealing with such a sensitive diplomatic matter.

I am confident that the President will hold steadfastly to our obligations to Taiwan and to the Taiwan Relation Act. I, for one, will be closely following U.S. policy in this region of the globe to assure that this administration and future ones do just that.

COMMEMORATION OF PEARL STREET CENTENNIAL DAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send to the desk Senate Concurrent Resolution 117, which I offer on behalf of the two Senators from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN and Mr. D'AMATO).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Con. Res. 117) expressing the sense of the Congress that September 4, 1982, the 100th anniversary of Thomas Edison's Pearl Street Central Power Station, should be commemorated as "Pearl Street Centennial Day."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in behalf of a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that September 4, 1982, the 100th anniversary of Thomas Edison's Pearl Street central power station, be commemorated as "Pearl Street Centennial Day."

On September 4, 1882, Thomas Edison began the operation of the Pearl Street Generating Station in New York's lower Manhattan giving birth to the electrical generation and distribution technology in America. On that day at exactly 3 p.m., electrician John Lieb closed the circuit breaker at the Pearl Street powerplant energizing the underground system. At the same moment, a half mile away, Edison himself turned on the lights at the Wall Street office of J. Pierpont Morgan. A soft steady glow filled the room. It was a momentous event in history. The age of incandescent lighting was inaugurated. Edison's Pearl Street station was the prototype of every central electrical generating station in the world today.

Thomas Edison's Pearl Street Station no longer exists, but its operation began New York's transformation into the leading modern metropolitan area in the United States, and signaled the birth of the electric power industry in this country and abroad. It has been said that no other man of the 19th century did as much as Thomas Edison to create the wealth of America and to improve the living standards of the Nation. Edison's vision and genius illuminated our lives, our cities, and our world. It is therefore fitting for us to commemorate one of his greatest accomplishments by recognizing September 4, 1982, as "Pearl Street Centennial Day."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 117) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 117

Whereas on September 4, 1882, Thomas Alva Edison's historic Pearl Street powerplant began supplying electricity in New York City; and

Whereas this event signaled the birth of the electric power industry in this country and abroad; and

Whereas the Pearl Street powerplant became the model for every central electric generating station in the world today; and

Whereas the Pearl Street station, and the many central stations built thereafter, made possible a higher standard of living for all the world; and

Whereas September 4, 1982, marks the one hundredth anniversary of the Pearl Street station: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives Concurring), That the Congress urges the people of the United States to commemorate September 4, 1982, the one hundredth anniversary of Thomas Edison's Pearl Street central power station, as "Pearl Street Centennial Day".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ANTITRUST EQUAL ENFORCEMENT ACT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the amendment introduced by Senator GORTON to S. 995, the Antitrust Equal Enforcement Act. This amendment would reverse in part the holding of the Supreme Court in the well-known case of Illinois Brick Co. versus Illinois by conferring antitrust standing on certain indirect purchasers and sellers who are the victims of antitrust violations.

The Illinois Brick decision has been the subject of extensive criticism and debate in the Congress, because it frequently bars relief to parties who are injured by antitrust violators. I feel that the amendment offered by Senator GORTON would go far toward resolving the problems caused by Illinois Brick, and therefore I urge that the Senate give it serious consideration.

Mr. President, if the Senate is to act on any antitrust legislation, it is important that we also address the numerous problems that have arisen from the Illinois Brick decision. The issue has been carefully considered by the past two Congresses. Senator GORTON's proposal deserves to be enacted and I hope the Senate will accept it.

COSTA RICA PRESIDENT MONGE SUPPORTS CARIBBEAN BASIN INITIATIVE

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, earlier this summer, President Luis Alberto Monge of Costa Rica visited the Congress and spoke with eloquence and emotion before the Foreign Relations Committee. President Monge noted that he had come to the United States to talk about Costa Rica and about the importance of the Caribbean Basin Initiative to his country.

All of us who were able to speak with President Monge were impressed at the tremendous efforts his administration is making to bring Costa Rica's present difficult economic situation under control. President Monge spoke of "draconian" measures such as an 80-percent increase in the price of petroleum products, a 70-percent increase in electricity rates, and a 100-percent increase in charges for water and public transportation. He described sharp increases in tax rates that are being imposed and noted that subsidies to a number of basic industries and commodities are being withdrawn. Clearly, with so many measures undertaken all at once, Costa Rica is going to experience serious difficulties in the near term.

President Monge asked that during this time the United States be generous in its support. He urged the Committee on Foreign Relations to support the Caribbean Basin Initiative in all of its aspects, noting that Costa Rica will depend heavily on the supplemental assistance this year to cover its balance-of-payments gap.

He also spoke strongly in favor of the trade component of the CBI, saying that the opportunity for one-way free trade with the United States would be extremely important for Costa Rica. He argued that this trade opportunity is one that Costa Rica and other Central Americans have been urging for more than 30 years.

Mr. President, I would like to share President Monge's comments before the committee with my colleagues, and I ask unanimous consent that the text be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY PRESIDENT LUIS ALBERTO MONGE OF COSTA RICA

During some 160 years of independence, Costa Rica has been an object of attention, sympathy, and solidarity for both the citizens and the Government of the United States. The history of the relations between our two countries is nothing less than exemplary, in that our tensions have been the exception, and our friendship and cooperation the rule. I recall at this moment the many North Americans who settled in my country since the very dawn of our independence and who made an outstanding contribution to its progress, and its material and spiritual development. At present, thousands of citizens of the United States live in Costa Rica, where they have found a land suitable to their own development within the framework of respect, peace, and freedom.

However, it is not difficult to discover that we are living under very extraordinary circumstances. The region of the American Continent from which I come is undergoing the gravest and deepest crisis of its history. This crisis extends to all aspects of human life.

This is precisely what transforms today's events into something more than a mere diplomatic gesture or another act of mutual reassurance of friendship. What happens in Latin Americans unavoidably affects relations between Latin Americans and the United States and involves the very fate of this Continent, which makes it difficult for all of us to enjoy harmonious relations on the basis of justice and liberty. Central America is a source of tension for the Western World; it is undeniably a region torn by conflict.

Its economic problems, its lack of development in social and political areas, and the constant resistance to change on the part of the more powerful social sectors are the source of frustration to the point that many people have lost all hope of finding and adequate solution to the problems. Many Central Americans have found refuge in the elusory path of revolution, which we know well only bring additional damage and suffering. Mutual respect within the framework of freedom and civil rule for more realistic approaches, but while we keep searching for them the situation continues to worsen due to violent confrontation and the acute economic crisis which is affecting us all, and which is particularly merciless to Central America and the Caribbean area.

The falling prices of our exports and the exorbitant rise in the price of imported oil add critically to the already endemic problems in the area. This situation sprung up after years of apparent stability which many of us feared would inevitably culminate in social violence. For a long time, Central America was not really on the map of the great powers' vital strategic and political concerns, until perhaps today.

For many North Americans, Central America may have appeared peaceful and secured from the perception of elements loyal to the international status quo. Informed Americans, and even the Governments of this country, for a long time, could afford ignoring Central America. Occasional skirmishes in Central America suggested instability, but nevertheless things would tend to remain normal for long periods of time. Solutions were wholly superficial, and the root of the evil was never treated properly, causing an abrupt break in the status quo. Things have changed now, obviously, in Central America, and Costa Rica is very perplexed because the alternatives offered to the majority of the people are not necessarily compatible with their aspirations of political and economic freedom, justice and peace.

Under present circumstances, for Central Americans who love liberty and who are firmly allied to the democratic principles, and who are identified with the great ideals of social justice, two avenues seem to be open. The solutions to the problems can be viewed as purely political and military in nature; or as matters to be solved by medium and long term economic and social development efforts.

On the one hand, we feel that the fall of democratic forces in this part of the hemisphere can bring about a general diseqilibrium which may prove harmful to the interests of the United States. It may appear logical for some to think of halting the advance of these destabilizing forces by military means only. This solution, unfortunately, implies other types of problems, that under most circumstances would unavoidably disrupt harmonious relations among nations of the hemisphere. The deprivation caused by war makes subversive activity an end in itself, and thus those from the extremes may succumb to the temptation of making war instead of working for peace which is needed to provide justice, freedom and well-being for all people. Because Costa Rica has committed herself for decades, particularly since the abolition of her army as a permanent institution, to principles of peace, freedom, and justice, it is essential for us to engage in a maximum effort to avoid belicose confrontation was the way to solve future problems.

On the other hand, a second approach to the problems of Central America through peaceful means requires immediate support from the United States and the International Organizations to seek medium and long term solutions which, no doubt, will affect the economic interests of the more conservative groups within the countries themselves.

The setting up of the integral process to bring forth our countries more effectively towards justice and freedom will not be accepted by groups occupying an extremist position.

The present Costa Rican situation demands immediate solutions from us with the support from our friends if these solutions are to have a chance, given the prevailing friction, and the growing confrontation.

As I said before, until recently the Central American countries were not on the map of the strategic and political concern of the more developed countries. Now, I must point out that my country, Costa Rica, barely appears at some level of concern in the minds of those who analyze the strategic and political problems of Central America and the Caribbean, and who only show us the evils that happen in nations which are torn by violence.

It would be unfortunate if the same policies applied with respect to other countries in the area will be followed in the case of Costa Rica, a country whose political maturity and social behavior makes it different from the typical neighbor. However, any comparison among countries and problems in Central America results so much in our favor that frequently the grave problems affecting us are underestimated. Moreover, from the political viewpoint, and from that of our alliance with those countries committed to freedom, Costa Rica offers no problems. Our solidarity with the United States and with other democratic nations is not based on a policy designed by a transitional government, but on the deep democratic convictions felt by our people, who, as in your case, have committed themselves to liberty and respect for one another as the foundation for a more equitable society.

As history can show the stability of our democratic institutions has been put to the test only twice in this century, and both times we have ultimately emerged strengthened from the crisis. We have in our favor three and a half decades of exemplary democratic life. Few countries can offer a similar record of respect for the rights of its citizens, as Costa Rica. These things prompted the great Peruvian political leader Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre, to refuse to accept Costa Rica as a country of the Third World. He would have it as a Western Democracy, equal to those which have reached the highest levels of political development.

For the resolution of our internal conflicts, we have resorted to the effective support of the Inter-American System, in which we reiterate our faith, and we believe it still has the potential to aid each and every country in the future.

Our social development, so misunderstood at times, has been the guarantee of our political equilibrium, and it has brought about low mortality rates as well as the rise in the average life expectancy, which, if added to surprisingly low illiteracy rates, confers upon our people a wholly respected set of qualities.

It is because of what we have attained that we now claim our rightful place on the list of concerns of our more powerful friends, particularly the United States since the present economic crisis is affecting us most severely. The consequences of this crisis for the life of the country, as well as the worrisome repercussions of the country's financial commitments, might very well erase our long standing achievements.

The financial crisis faced by Costa Rica is worse than that suffered by other countries in the area, for there is a great deal to be lost. We are talking about a real financial and economic crisis different from any other faced by a Latin American country since 1930. The total external debt is on the order of $4 billion, of which nearly $3 billion is owed by the public sector. The annual per capita income enjoyed by Costa Ricans reached some $1.200 in recent years. It has since fallen considerably, and will, in real terms, possibly drop as low as $200 before the current year ends. The external debt per capita of Costa Rica is approximately $1.780, a figure which contracts sharply with the real per capita income figure of $200.

We are conducting negotiations with the International Monetary Fund. Whatever our success there, it will only be a starting point, a catalyst for the revitalizing force of other external help which we must receive from friendly countries. To conclude successful negotiations with respect to our external debt we need the help of the United States, as well as its support before the International Agencies.

Under our national policy to put the house in order, we have taken strong economic measures. We are eliminating subsidies to allow public services to raise to levels of present cost. We are striving to contain the expansion of the public sector, even at the expense of social stability and growing unemployment. In taking the strong measures outlined, we are very much aware of the serious effects of unemployment in a country lacking unemployment insurance, since open unemployment brings about hunger and malnutrition and other ills which could turn themselves into a powder keg.

Even when patience has been exceptional, and when love and respect for liberty and democratic institutions have firmly upheld, people can eventually act uncharacteristically if they are faced with hunger. If Costa Rica's democracy should fall and follow the same path of its neighbors, let us all be aware that this could mean the end to consolidate a Western democratic system in Latin America, under the present circumstances.

Inflation in Costa Rica has increased tremendously, and it could reach disastrous proportions in the near future. Our currency was devalued in 1981 by 60% and during that period, the previous administration stopped payment on the public external debt. This is very important to keep in mind, since Costa Rica has traditionally enjoyed substantial monetary stability.

As might be assumed, the effects of devaluation were disastrous, resulting in a total inmobility of new sources of private capital into our economy. The productive capacity of our country diminished and the private sector is going bankrupt. In 1977, our GNP's growth rate was 8.9%. It is negative at present. It is clear that a situation such as this will tend to generate political problems. However, if these problems grow for the worse, our democracy may soon face chaos, our alliance with the free and democratic countries could very well collapse. In addition, the deterioration of our situation resulted in a general credibility crisis, and a tarnished image abroad as well. Internally, lack of credibility could bring about disastrous social consequences. Our Government has embarked on serious efforts to forge a new image abroad. The extraordinary opportunity which you have given me to explain these problems will contribute to our reaching that goal.

All these years, we have demonstrated that democracy is viable in a tropical country. We have had the most positive experience of progress with freedom and of respect to the individual that had ever existed in a small, poor country. If this democratic experience is destroyed by natural economic forces, it would frustrate hopes which transcend our own aspirations, in places beyond our borders, as a bad testimonial for many others.

In order to address our more acute problems, we are undertaking a general mobilization—as if we were at war—and we have found that the average Costa Rican is, more than ever, ready to make a sacrifice. This very fact gives us the moral backing to solicit help and it would be very comforting to know that our friends are with us. We have been at the side of the Western democratic powers during their most difficult times. Ours has been a modest contribution in comparison with the total sacrifice which the involved nations endured, for example, during World War II. However, from our internal perspective, and measured by the standards of our own poverty and deprivation, it was an extraordinary and important effort.

When we have been needed, we have been present, and we have brought our moral support which is, plainly speaking, our best asset. This is why our people find it quite urgent that we explore all possibilities to obtain economic aid which will lessen the enormity of the sacrifice expected of them, and that can help to rescue our nation.

I could, of course, mention strategic factors to the essence of my argument and note, for example, how important it is for the United States to maintain a good, solid and reliable ally in the Caribbean Basin, an ally that should be saved for the cause of liberty. I would stress also, and very logically indeed, that we need economic help now so that in the future military aid will not be required. But I prefer to build on those other aspects which are relevant to our common convictions, such as love of liberty and solidarity between two democratic nations. We urgently need help now, as if we were at war, and it would be most regrettable if it did not come in time for us to utilize it effectively for the sake of democracy.

There is an additional subject that I would like to address directly. Some sectors of the North American press have criticized Costa Rica for having invested so heavily in social welfare policies. It is surprising to notice that, on the other hand, even stronger criticism is leveled against our neighboring countries for not having invested sufficiently in the betterment of their people's social environment. We are proud that we cannot deny that we have made great efforts to better the life of the average Costa Rican, that we have improved his health and his education, that we have provided him with decent housing, and that we have improved our country's infrastructure. The results of this policy represent our best hope for being able to partially absorb the crisis which we currently face.

We also recognize our defects and errors. This is a normal aspect of democratic life, which demands constant adjustment and corections. But what we have done is precisely what makes us different from other countries politically less fortunate than ours. If we have invested in education and in public health while others have invested in weapons, we are proud of this difference. This is not the cause of our crisis. The internal economic problems, not properly handled in the past, the fact that entire harvests have had to be used to pay for oil imports—these are disproportionately new elements—which could have not been foreseen in a time of expansion such as that known by our society in recent years. It is possible that if we were to live the past again, we would take the same course of action. We understand, of course, that, faced with new circumstances, new approaches are imperative. Together with our people, we are looking for new ways to cope with difficult times.

The situation which I have attempted to describe today may appear somewhat pessimistic. Eugene O'Neil once said, "There is an underlying optimism, not apparent on the surface, which is often taken by pessimism".

Our optimism contains within itself the seed of optimism which gives us the hope and the strength to fight for a better day.

Our new Government's action is deeply committed to raising production, since peace without food is difficult to achieve. We have made a commitment to social justice, in particular to attaining tranquility by eliminating abject poverty. We have renewed the great commitment of our people to democracy, since only through liberty can we build a hopeful and promising future.

Our Government is totally committed to those fundamental values which are to be respected to the utmost. These commitments form the framework of our actions and our life. We hope to be able to secure help in order to carry on our program of social, economic and political progress for our people.

The Costa Rican nation has conducted an intensive self-examination in the past few months, and has decided to unite in order to foster a better society. We are undertaking the first steps to realize better our great agricultural potential, that God-given resource which we must fully develop if we are to enjoy and sustain economic growth and provide a better life for our people.

Ladies and gentlemen of this great country, you have spent a great portion of your history pursuing a dream—the American dream—That is why you should be able to understand the same type of dream as it exists in a small country like mine. You should know that we, too, dream of a better future.

We are only too aware that the dream we have described cannot come true unless we attempt to eliminate poverty, unrest, social injustice, and other scourges that plague my part of the world. In order to realize this dream we need to feel that we are not alone, that you are marching at our side as we begin this great crusade to save a nation!

PREPARATION FOR OCS HEARING

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I am delighted to learn that Senator WEICKER, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Supply of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, has scheduled a hearing for September 8, 1982, on the Department of Interior's 5-year Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas leasing program. I understand that Senator WEICKER invited Secretary Watt to testify personally and that he has accepted the invitation to appear before the subcommittee. I know that the minority members of the subcommittee are also pleased to learn of this hearing as they had all requested that such a hearing be scheduled to consider this most important subject.

It is difficult to overstate the importance of the administration's plans to promote development of the oil and gas resources of the Outer Continental Shelf. Extending as far as 500 miles in some places from the shoreline, the OCS lies under the open sea on the coasts of the United States, including Alaska. The U.S. Geological Survey has estimated that the OCS may contain from 20 to 40 percent of the Nation's remaining deposits of conventionally recoverable crude oil. The administration estimates of revenues in fiscal year 1983 from the OCS declined from an initial figure of $18 billion to $15.7 billion in the April 10 budget update, but OCS receipts are still the second largest revenue source to the U.S. Treasury.

The administration's proposal to offer for lease 1 billion acres of the OCS in a 5-year period with substantial changes in the current procedures for evaluating potential environmental impact is a matter that deserves careful congressional review. Other legislation such as the proposals for sharing OCS receipts with the coastal States will, of course, be affected by this 5-year plan.

Under the OCS Lands Act Amendments of 1978, the Secretary of the Interior is required to submit to Congress a proposed leasing program at least 60 days prior to the Secretary's approval of the program. As the final proposed program was submitted to Congress on May 11, the 60-day waiting period ran out on July 10. On July 21 Secretary Watt approved the new program.

The attention of the Congress in recent months has been consumed by budgetary matters. While it would have been preferable to have begun committee oversight of the OCS program during this period, the OCS leasing is so important for so many reasons, including efforts to balance the budget, and the need to protect the ocean, its resources, and our coasts, that there should be constant congressional attention during its implementation.

I have submitted to the Department of Interior a series of questions on the 5-year plan and received their responses. These questions and answers have in turn raised more questions which I intend to put to the Department. I hope that these questions and answers which are available now will be of assistance to others in the preparation for the hearing on September 8.

There are some general issues which still trouble me. Some of these issues are:

First. Will the magnitude of the proposed leasing program overwhelm the ability of the States, local communities, and the public to analyze the social, economic, and environmental effects of proposed lease sales and provide substantive comments to the Department of Interior?

Second. Is the Department of Interior's determination of "net social value" firmly grounded on accurate assumptions, such as the resource estimates and the costs of ecological damage?

Third. Has the Department appropriately considered the "equitable sharing of developmental benefits and environmental risks?"

Fourth. Are the Department's estimates of revenues from OCS lands realistic? They have been revised downward once and GAO and other industry analysts still question the projected revenues.

Fifth. Will the public obtain the fair market value for these tracts given the generally depressed state of the industry, the difficulty of capital formation, and the enormous number of leases being offered?

There is, I believe, a danger that unless these issues are properly addressed in the 5-year program that the result will be endless litigation by States and environmental groups seeking to enjoin the lease sales. This delay could cost the Treasury dearly as OCS revenues are either foregone, delayed or greatly reduced.

I ask unanimous consent that my questions to the Department of Interior and their responses be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D.C., April 30, 1982.

Hon. HENRY M. JACKSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JACKSON: We are pleased to respond to your request of April 19 regarding questions about the tentative proposed final 5-year OCS leasing program.

Because several of your questions involve complex matters and considerable detail of budget estimates, we have been unable to provide answers to all 13 of your questions in this letter by your requested date of April 30. I have enclosed answers to questions number 1, 2, 3, 7, 9, 10, and 11.

As soon as answers to the remaining questions are prepared, we will forward them to you. We believe this will be next week.

Sincerely,

DONALD PAUL HODEL,
Under Secretary.

Question 1. There have been suggestions that the proposed streamlining of the OCS leasing process, coupled with the changed substantive approach regarding the composition of sales will provide greater opportunities for smaller firms to participate in OCS lease sales. Have you performed any studies relating to the effects on competition that this proposed program will have, or have there been any positive expressions of intent to compete for OCS leases by firms that, to date, have not participated in OCS lease sales?

Question 2. What are the anticipated effects of the proposed leasing program on the ability of small firms to participate in OCS lease sales?

Response. While we have not prepared a separate, specific study of the potential effects of the program on small companies, a variety of comments have been received on the effects of the proposed 5-year OCS leasing program on participation by smaller firms and competition. These comments have been analyzed and considered in the process of formulating the program.

We have not received any expressions of interest by firms who have not previously participated in OCS leasing. This is due in large part, no doubt, because over 500 firms are currently on the list of qualified bidders. One would expect additional interest to emerge after the availability of good opportunities is evident in the leasing market, rather than at this early stage.

We look for increased participation by those small companies that are now interested in OCS leasing. With the areawide leasing approach, we believe unique exploration strategies can be used by smaller companies in determining the real hydrocarbon worth of an area. Moving away from government tract selection could foster innovative thinking by all companies and give them a chance to use their approach rather than be "outvoted" in a nomination and tract selection process. We also believe that joint bidding among small companies will continue to be used to acquire leases.

An illustration of some of the thinking involved is provided by the following testimony of Roger Stoneburner, Senior Vice President for Exploration, Union Texas Petroleum Corp. on January 21, 1982, before the House Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf:

"No single company's exploration department has a monopoly on exploration know-how. All of our experience tells us that multiple imaginative strategies, by multiple companies, in successive repeated exploration efforts result in more oil and gas discoveries in a shorter period of time. This concept justifies a broader nominating process.

". . . Our company believes more acreage of higher quality will allow companies like Union Texas to bid more often. The additional higher quality acreage will increase participation and the level of exploration but, in all probability, not to the point that the most promising areas will receive diminished bids."

Question 3. Were studies performed prior to proposing the expanded leasing program with respect to the capability of the industry to accommodate the increased acreage that is to be made available for lease? Did you evaluate the constraints on the industry that may limit their ability to participate effectively in OCS lease sales? Were any of the following factors that may adversely affect the ability of the industry to respond to the proposed program, taken into consideration: (1) capital availability, (2) rig and equipment availability, (3) engineering, technical support, and skilled labor availability?

Response. There have been a number of comments on the adequacy of capital, equipment and labor. The International Association of Drilling Contractors, for example, has submitted an analysis that shows adequate availability of rigs for exploratory drilling. Nevertheless, the expansion in lease offerings is not predicated on a one-to-one expansion in leases issued or wells drilled. It is primarily a means of assuring that OCS exploration can move forward at as rapid a pace as firms think is efficient. In this approach, rather than having the government's leasing program act as a bottleneck restricting our Nation's exploration of the OCS, the market system can allocate capital, rigs, and skilled labor in the way that gives the greatest payoff for firms as well as the national economy. If the potential for payoffs from discovery of OCS oil and gas are judged to warrant an expansion in the capital, equipment and labor allocated to the OCS, then that will be the result of the investments made by firms. If the government were to continue restricting the availability of leases, industry would have no reason to expand its offshore investments and capabilities, even if the geology is promising. It is possible however, that the potential payoffs on the OCS are not sufficiently promising. In this case, leasing and exploration investments will not increase. The expansion in lease offerings will have yielded disappointing results, but not resulted in any significant costs. It will not be damaging to the Nation to have offered tracts that drew no bidding or exploration. In summary, the pace of leasing and exploratory drilling should be determined primarily by the market's response to the opportunities provided by the resources of the OCS, not by the government's estimate of industry capabilities or assessment of the best prospects.

We would also point out that, as one illustration of industry's capacity, there are currently 260 new mobile offshore drilling rigs under construction worldwide to join the 254 now in operation in U.S. waters or the 529 rigs worldwide.

Question 7. The tentative proposed final OCS lease sale schedule contains 40 sales, 4 more than the June 1980 sale schedule. In addition, a substantial number of the sales have had their proposed sale dates advanced. How was the ability of the various State governments to respond to the expanded/accelerated OCS leasing program taken into consideration? What assurances are there, particularly in the case of Alaska, which is scheduled for 16 of the 40 sales, that the States will be able to respond to and participate in the process in a timely fashion and will not be an impediment to the program moving forward on schedule?

Response. The ability of the States to respond to accelerated leasing should not be a problem. The same decision points and opportunities to provide comments are provided in the new leasing program as in the past.

The refinement of the area-wide offering approach announced in March responds in large measure to the concern that offering entire planning areas will affect the ability of State and local governments to effectively participate in the pre-lease sale process.

The streamlined approach to EIS's should enhance contributions from State and local agencies and the public. Once an EIS has been prepared which considers an entire planning area, subsequent NEPA documents can focus on newly developed information, such as results of environmental studies of actual drilling. This should result in a reduced administrative burden for all reviewers and in more effective and efficient participation.

In addition, in the areas off Alaska, there have been several refinements that allow the State and local governments to respond easier to the program during the next few years. Changes in the March 1982 tentative proposed final program, as compared to the final program of June 1980 issued by former Secretary Andrus, reflect several adjustments that will allow Alaska more time to respond to the leasing program. These include the cancellation of sales 61 (Kodiak) and 75 (N. Aleutian Shelf) and the delay by 2 months of sales 57 (Norton) and 70 (St. George).

Question 9. Detail your assumptions, on a sale-by-sale basis, that formed the basis for the $13.2 billion estimate of receipts to be obtained from OCS lease sales scheduled in FY 1983. This estimate was contained in the President's budget request for the Department of the Interior for FY 1983.

Response. The assumptions on which the $13.2 billion estimate of bonuses was based are shown on Table 1 attached. The column headed "Reserves Equivalent Barrels (Millions)" shows the amount of resources expected to be offered in each sale. The column headed "Mean Range of Values per Barrel" shows the maximum value per barrel that we could expect to be bid. That estimate is based on our calculation of the value of the oil to companies after deducting all of the costs of lease acquisitions, exploration, production, transportation, and taxes from the price per barrel of oil which ranged from $30 to $35 per barrel when the estimate was made. The key is not the price of oil at the time of the estimate or when the sale is held, but the expected price over the expected production life of the field. The column headed "Discounted Receipts Factor" shows an adjustment factor to discount for possible risks and uncertainties, such as the chance that the sales won't take place as scheduled, that all resources in the area may not be offered for lease, that all resources won't be bid on, or the chance that accelerated leasing may increase the firms' cost of borrowing.

Subsequent to the preparation of the original estimates, the Secretary announced his tentative proposed final 5-year leasing schedule on March 15. Under that schedule, one sale, sale 73, will be postponed until September, and another, sale 75, will be deleted. Those changes are footnoted on the table.

On April 10, OMB submitted to the Congress its current budget estimates which indicated that the $13.2 billion estimate of receipts from sales had declined to $10.9 billion. Of the $2.3 billion decline, $400 million was attributed to the rescheduling of sale 73 and dropping of sale 75. An additional $1.9 billion decline in the overall estimate was also made by OMB to reflect the greater uncertainty about capital availablity due to lower oil prices.

Question 10. The recent decline in oil firm profitability may well affect the industry's ability to bid the amounts that you have projected as revenue in your FY 1983 budget request. This decline in profitability may affect a firm by both reducing their cash availability and by potentially reducing the availability of credit. The reduced availability of capital may affect firm bidding behavior in either one of two ways. First, they may not be able to bid on all of their top prospects, or they may, in order to bid on the full range of their prospects, reduce their bids. If either of the two situations obtain, it may lead to an absolute reduction in the amount of revenue raised by the lease sales. Have you taken into account the softening of the crude oil prices and its possible near-term effects on the FY 1983 OCS lease sales and revenue projections?

Response. The original estimate of $13.2 billion in bonuses to be received from lease sales in FY 1983 was discounted for the difficulty that oil companies might have in obtaining the capital required to bid on the larger offerings scheduled for FY 1983. The recent drop in crude oil prices also has caused further reduction in OMB's estimate of bonuses to be received in FY 1983 by $1.9 billion. This reduction was made in the document "Current Budget Estimates" issued on April 10 by the Office of Management and Budget. It reflects greater uncertainty about capital availability due to lower oil prices.

We would point out, however, that it is the long-term price of crude oil which should be the principal determinant of the amounts that will be bid for these tracts since no production can be expected from them for 5 to 10 years and a discovery may have a production life of 25 or more years.

We do not believe that the recent softness in the crude oil market will significantly affect the long-term price of oil.

Recent trends in the financial condition of the oil industry will undoubtedly have an effect on the market's response to expanded lease offerings. While this may affect revenue estimates, it does not mean that the basic policy of offering much more acreage for lease is inappropriate. Investments in any sector of the economy depend on financial and economic conditions and they may decline as prices decline. From the viewpoint of the economy, there is no more reason to restrict OCS lease offerings in times of declining prices than there is to restrict the availability of other basic resources such as agricultural land or iron ore. Restricting the availability of basic resources, including opportunities for offshore oil and gas exploration, would tend to slow economic recovery.

Question 11. In view of the recent decreasing demand for oil and the resultant softening in the price for oil, have you reviewed and revised your revenue estimates to be derived from the royalty from OCS production? I understand that the assumption behind the $3.3 billion projection for OCS royalty receipts was a wellhead price of $37.26 per barrel. Given that the current price barrel is substantially less than that, I request that a revised estimate as to royalty receipts be provided.

Response. The Administration has not changed it's economic assumptions since the publication of the January budget, and therefore no new projections of oil prices and royalties have been made. However, sensitivity analyses which have been done indicate that royalty payments are not significantly affected by reduced prices because the reduction in revenue occurs in the amount paid in windfall profit tax, not in the amount paid as royalty. What we call royalties should really be called net royalties. Net royalties are calculated as follows:

Quantity produced × price = value.

Value × 16⅔% = gross royalties.

Gross royalties minus windfall profits tax = net royalties.

When oil prices drop, value drops and gross royalties are reduced. But the formula for calculating the windfall profits tax, which is too complicated to explain here, causes the amount paid as a windfall profits tax to decline in about the same proportion as gross royalties. Therefore, the amount which we call royalties (net royalties) remains about the same.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D.C.

Hon HENRY M. JACKSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JACKSON: This supplements our response of April 30 regarding the questions you asked in your letter of April 19 on the tentative proposed final 5-year OCS leasing program.

In the April 30 response, we provided answers to questions 1, 2, 3, 7, 9, 10 and 11. Enclosed are responses to questions 4, 5, 6, 8, 12 and 13.

Sincerely,

DONALD PAUL HODEL,
Under Secretary.

Enclosure.

Question 4. The Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978 (P.L. 95-372) required the Department of the Interior to experiment with alternative bidding systems for a period of five years from the date of enactment. Bidding systems, other than cash bonus with a royalty fixed at not less than 12½ percent, are to be applied to not less than 20 percent and not more than 60 percent of the total area offered for lease each year, unless the Secretary of the Department of the Interior makes a determination that the use of such bidding systems is "inconsistent with the purposes and policies" of the Amendments. Which alternative bidding systems are scheduled to be utilized in the OCS lease sales in fiscal year 1983? This should be presented on a sale-by-sale basis.

Response. Bidding systems are designed on a sale-by-sale basis. To date, the Department of the Interior has developed bidding systems for proposed sales through August 1982. Bidding system designs for sales in FY 1983 have not yet been developed for each individual sale. Table 1 which indicates sale-by-sale the bidding systems used for sales in FY 1982. DOI has experimented with alternative systems in 22 sales starting in 1974 and in 19 since the enactment of the 1978 Amendments. Alternative bidding systems that have been tested are royalty bidding with a fixed cash bonus, cash bonus bidding with a sliding scale royalty, and cash bonus bidding with a fixed net profit share.

In the January 26, 1982, Federal Register, the Department requested comments on a proposed matrix of bidding systems for OCS sales consistent with the new concept of offering larger areas for lease. A copy of the request is attached. The proposed matrix provides a streamlined approach to future bidding systems' use by designating the types of bidding systems that might be used according to broad geographic area and water depth. Final decisions on the use of the bidding system matrix have not yet been made.

The results of our previous tests are presently being analyzed. We recognize the need to direct future tests towards those systems which offer the greatest promise to meet the goals of the OCS Lands Act.

Question 5. As was mentioned previously, the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments requires that the alternative bidding systems be used for a period of five years from the date of enactment. What plans does the Department of the Interior have, at this time, for continued use of bidding systems, other than cash bonus bid, in FY 1984 through FY 1987?

Response. No specific plans have been developed for these years. However, the matrix concept discussed in Question 4 could be applied if it is adopted. The Department will review the analysis of the previous experiments and select those systems deemed to best achieve the goals prescribed by the OCSLA. It should be noted that the 5-year period mandated by Congress that requires testing of alternative systems ends in September 1983.

Question 6. Provide a detailed analysis showing the expected efficiencies that will result from the implementation of various streamlining proposals. This should be compared to the manner in which OCS leasing activities were conducted prior to the proposed streamlining initiatives. Estimates should be quantified insofar as possible (i.e., man-years, funding requirements, workload indicators, etc.). This should be done for the following areas: (1) environmental impact analysis and EIS preparation, (2) activities associated with pre-sale and sale of leases, (3) determination of fair market value, and (4) post-lease management.

Response. (1) and (2). Environmental analysis and pre-sale and sale activities.

For your information, we are enclosing a table of budget estimates recently submitted as part of our proposed final leasing program. See Table II.

Streamlining is anticipated to result in an acceleration in the issuance of OCS leases which would, in turn, reduce the administrative costs per lease issued including: (1) environmental impact analysis and EIS preparation, (2) activities associated with pre-sale and sale of leases.

This increased efficiency is described in the Bureau of Land Management's budget justification for FY 83 (pp. 48-50), copy attached. From this material, it is evident that the July 1981 proposed schedule implementing streamlining was estimated to result in an increase over the June 1980 schedule (prestreamlining) of 400 leases issued for FY 1982 and thus a reduction of $41,000 in estimated average cost per lease issued. For FY 1983, the July 1981 proposed schedule was estimated to result in an increase over the June 1980 schedule of 920 leases issued, and thus a reduction of $21,000 in the estimated average cost of each lease issued.

As one example of the potential decrease in EIS workload, the March 1982 tentative proposed final schedule called for 40 sales. Of that total, there were six sales that already had a final or draft EIS completed by the end of April 1982. Of the remaining 34 sales, only 28 NEPA documents would have to be prepared as a result of multi-sale EIS's in the Gulf of Mexico. Of these 28 EIS's to be done, only 11 would be a first generation EIS (first-time basic analysis of the area). The other 17 would either be a second generation EIS, which are presumably shorter and add only the changes necessary to update the initial EIS, or would be another, shorter, NEPA type document. This would be a considerable reduction in EIS expenses and manpower.

Pre-lease site specific geohazard studies are being phased out under streamlining. Industry will be required, as it has been in the past, to perform detailed post-lease site-specific surveys. The results of the surveys will be reviewed by MMS (Minerals Management Service) as will drilling and production plans to make sure that proposed operations will be safe. MMS will do pre-sale regional (broad reconnaissance) and topical geohazard studies. Savings resulting from these changes will be offset by increased data requirements associated with large sale areas.

(3). Determination of fair market value.

Currently, a Government established pre-sale evaluation on every tract offered for sale is used as the primary means of assuring receipt of fair market value. The most logical way to reduce the number of tracts evaluated is to perform evaluations post-sale only on tracts receiving bids. For all sales except the reoffering sale, during the period December 1979 through February 1982, only 48 percent of the tracts offered for sale received bids. This percentage is anticipated to decrease considerably under areawide offerings.

The streamlined procedures provide for post-sale evaluation of only a certain portion of tracts receiving bids. In frontier areas a sample of about 35 percent of only those tracts receiving bids will be evaluated postsale as compared to the present system of evaluating all tracts offered (30 percent on predetermined criteria and another 5 percent random). In mature areas, in addition to the 35 percent sample mentioned above, all structures containing proven, drainage, or developed tracts would also be evaluated. (See the discussion in response to question 8.)

For the last five Gulf of Mexico OCS sales (A62, 62, A66, 66, and 67), utilizing the proposed streamlining procedures for fair market value determinations, MMS would have, at the most, had to evaluate 370 tracts as compared to the 928 tracts actually evaluated. The savings could be even greater in a frontier area where historically a lower percentage of tracts receive bids. The proposed procedures are intended to allow MMS to handle larger sale offerings with minimal increases in budget and personnel resources. Thus, for example, the FY 1983 request is 9.3 percent higher than the appropriated amount for FY 1982. The number of sales being held will increase from seven to nine.

(4). Post-lease Management.

The various streamlining proposals initiated by the MMS in the year 1981 were intended to reduce the paperwork burden on the industry. Any resulting benefits to MMS were welcome, but such benefits were not primary to initiating the effort. Only two of the streamlining proposals would produce a savings for MMS. These are the repeal of FIRS (Failure Inventory Reporting System) and the repeal of a requirement to set a maximum efficient production rate for all reservoirs.

The FIRS program has been unduly burdensome to industry. Its purpose was to make OCS waters safer against spills by tracking the performance of some 19 safety devices on all producing platforms. However, FIRS was not cost effective. In order to maintain the intent of the program, the MMS is incorporating the safety aspects of FIRS into its Safety Information Program (SIP). Through this program, safety device performance is tracked by periodic inspection. The program includes data from the Events File, accident investigations, alleged violations, and lessee reports on fires, accidents, spills, and injuries. SIP is an automated system designed to be sensitive to safety-device incidents of noncompliance. We estimate an annual savings to industry of about $6.25 million and to MMS of about ¾ million dollars. This change was published as a final rule in the Federal Register of April 30, 1982.

With the proposed revision to OCS Order No. 11, lessees of approximately 90 percent of the 3800 currently producing reservoirs will no longer be required to submit an application to MMS to set a maximum efficient rate of production. If approved, this will mean a workload reduction to the MMS of no more than 30 percent because of the many other requirements involving MMS monitoring.

Question 8. With regard to the Fair Market Value issue, the Department of the Interior has indicated that it is proposing to use a three-phase screening process to evaluate FMV after the sales have taken place. In your submission of the five-year leasing program to Congress, it was stated that this is an effort to more efficiently FMV. The system relies to a significant degree on competition in the marketplace to arrive at a FMV determination. Your proposal indicates that if a tract receives three or more bids, unless the tract is selected for FMV evaluation under different criteria, that the high bid would be accepted. Historically, 60 percent of all tracts leased have received fewer than two bids, and would, therefore, require you to perform at a minimum a FMV analysis for those leases prior to accepting or rejecting the bid.

Your budget indicates that you expect to issue 1800 leases in fiscal year 1983. Of those 1800, 1080 may receive fewer than the three-bid minimum and require a case-by-case FMV analysis. In fiscal year 1981, DOI offered for lease 1227 tracts for which FMV evaluations were performed. Given the emphasis, as reflected in several legal actions in recent years, that has been placed on the Fair Market Value being received by the government, this issue is of concern to me. Provide a detailed explanation of the procedures that the Department of the Interior will utilize in determining FMV. Included should be your estimate of the number of tracts that will have a FMV analysis performed on them in the fiscal year 1983-fiscal year 1987 time span. The resources (personnel and funding) that will be applied to this activity should also be submitted.

Answer. In recent leasing history, the past 13 OCS sales, only 38 percent of all tracts leased have received one bid and approximately 58 percent have received two or fewer bids. However, under the streamlined procedures, not all one- and two-bid tracts would be evaluated.

The process involves the following: 1. Post-sale rather than pre-sale evaluation has been adopted in order to save the effort expended on evaluating tracts not receiving bids. In advance of the sale, MMS efforts will be concentrated on preparation of geological maps using selected geological and geophysical data and information for the entire area offered for lease. Increased emphasis will be placed on competition to establish fair market value.

2. Evaluation of specific tracts will be limited to a post-sale period following the sale and will rely primarily on prospect and/or structure maps prepared pre-sale utilizing industry geological and geophysical data acquired under permits.

3. Only tracts which receive bids (historically about 50 percent of the acreage offered—probably less with increased sale sizes or offering of entire areas) will be evaluated post-sale.

Within 3 days after preparation of the bid recap, MMS will analyze the sale in light of predetermined criteria to select structures to be evaluated. The sample of tracts to be evaluated will include:

(a) 100 percent of structures containing proven, drainage, or development tracts,

(b) an appropriate number of tracts selected on the basis of predetermined criteria, generally in the range of 30 percent of tracts receiving bids.

(c) a random sample of tracts selected on a structure basis regardless of the number of bids received to yield a sample of 5 percent of the tracts receiving bids.

5. MMS will provide evaluation for the selected tracts as they become available. Structures containing highest dollar bids, where practical, will be cleared first.

MMS may provide a comparative evaluation screen first, the details of which are currently being developed and validated. It is envisioned that this phase will be completed within 3 weeks following the sale. If MMS is not able to detect prospects with resource potential, these tracts will be assigned a "minimum" value and high bids on them will be immediately recommended for acceptance (i.e., because by definition a company would have already offered at least the minimum bid). The remaining tracts would then be tested for comparable values against acceptable bids on other tracts which share the same geological structure, or against hypothetical or actual analogs with similar characteristics of structural size, water depths, distance from shore, drilling depths, and geological characteristics. If this evaluation is favorable in terms of values offered, the tracts will be recommended for acceptance. It is proposed that tracts recommended for acceptance under this phase will not have a dollar value assigned. MMS will provide a statement outlining the basis for recommending acceptance of the high bid.

6. If the high bids do not pass the comparative screen the tracts will receive a quantitative evaluation to be completed within 90 days following the sale. These tracts remaining to be evaluated are those where there is sufficient concern that the high bid might not represent fair market value. The procedures for the evaluation of selected tracts are the same as those presently employed in pre-sale tract specific evaluations, i.e., conventional petroleum resource evaluation methods. Geophysical and geological data will be correlated and mapped, stratigraphic thickness and reservoir be correlated and mapped, stratigraphic thickness and reservoir volumes estimated, and the likelihood of hydrocarbon occurrence evaluated. Geophysical and geological evaluation will be followed by as assessment of petroleum engineering parameters, infrastructure requirements, and all economic parameters which influence the revenues and costs of production. Resource, engineering, and economic parameters will be represented in the evaluation as probability distributions and will be incorporated into the calculations using a probabilistic computer simulation method. The resource economic value calculations will be a straight-forward discounted cast flow procedure.

The output from the calculation will be a distribution of resource economic values which represent the collective uncertainties of the inputs. For all tracts for which a detailed Monte Carlo discounted cash flow evaluation is made, MMS will continue to provide a mean (MROV), discounted mean (DMROV), and the range of values with associated probability estimates. This will allow decisionmakers to consider not only whether the high bid exceeds the MMS mean tract value, but also to consider the probability of the high bid representing the actual tract value. Although the recommendation to accept or reject bids on tracts so evaluated will be submitted within 3 months of the sale date, accept/reject recommendations will be made as soon as they are determined. In general, structures with the highest bid tracts will be analyzed first to allow early acceptance/rejection decisions on those tracts.

7. Current post-scale bid adequacy criteria will be applied, including use of the MROV, DMROV, and the AEOT. In certain anomalous situations, a geometric mean may be used to calculate the AEOT instead of an arithmetic mean as in the past.

The projection of acreage to be leased and the number of leases issued for the period FY 1983–1987 is shown in the following tabulation. The tabulation also includes estimates based upon historical data of the number of tracts likely to receive bids and under the proposed streamlining procedures the number of tracts likely to require a specific determination of fair market value (FMV). It should be emphasized that these are very rough estimates and because of the lack of comparable historical data, they may vary considerably from actual results. These estimates are the mean numbers in calculations that developed a low-high range. The 1800 leases estimate for FY 1983 previously mentioned was the high estimate for that year.

	Fiscal year—
	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Millions of acres leased	7.4	6.8	7.3	5.6	5.0
Leases	1,300	1,190	1,280	980	875
Tracts receiving bids	1,445	1,320	1,420	1,090	970
Tracts requiring FMV determination	550	500	540	415	370

The sources (personnel and funding) estimated to be required to conduct these FMV determinations are as follows:

	Fiscal year—
	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Funds (millions)	29.8	31.0	32.0	33.0	33.0
Personnel (full-time equivalent total)	350	381	381	381	381

Question 12. Provide data relating to production from OCS leases for FY 1981 and the first two quarters of FY 1982. Provide the OCS royalty receipts and the average wellhead price per barrel for OCS oil for the same time periods.

Response. Production and sales figures for fiscal year 1981 are available which can be compared as requested. There are as follows:

Production:
Oil and condensate (bbl)	278,344,949
Gas (mcf)	4,900,654,703
Sales:
Oil and condensate:
Quantity sold (bbl)	283,865,810
Royalty value	$1,432,141,685
Average price per bbl	$31.07
Gas:
Quantity sold (mcf)	4,879,242,071
Royalty value	$1,624,317,759
Average price per mcf	$2.04

Sales figures usually are slightly less than production figures because of the lag time inherent with measurement and delivery. However, for the year 1981, sales figures are slightly higher. Most likely this means that the continuing auditing process resulted in a credit carryover from the year 1980 or perhaps even earlier.

For fiscal year 1982, only first quarter production figures are available and these estimate the amount of production for the first 2 months from production off California. First quarter production was 71.374 million barrels and 1.225 trillion cubic feet.

Question 13. What indication do you have that the Department of Transportation, U.S. Coast Guard, has the ability to fulfill their responsibilities relating to safety and environmental protection given the expanded OCS leasing program and the probability, therefore, of an increase in the number of drilling and production rigs? Do you know if the Coast Guard took this into consideration in estimating their staffing and funding requirements for fiscal year 1983 and beyond?

Response. We have kept the Department of Transportation, U.S. Coast Guard, advised of the proposals to accelerate OCS leasing. We have received no indication from them that they will be unable to fulfill their responsibilities for safety and environmental protection. It should be noted that the potential increase in Coast Guard needs would only come after leasing and with increases in drilling rigs and production. This will not occur until after fiscal year 1983. The Coast Guard should thus have ample time to plan for and budget these needs. Further information can be obtained from the U.S. Coast Guard.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D.C. June 16, 1982.

Hon. HENRY M. JACKSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JACKSON: Enclosed are responses to the questions you transmitted on May 5. I hope these responses fully address your concerns.

Sincerely,

DON HODEL,
Under Secretary.

Enclosures.

RESPONSES TO QUESTIONS RAISED BY SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON ON MAY 5, 1982

Question 1. It appears that DOI is still not giving equal weight to the purposes of the OCSLAA. It seems clear that DOI has emphasized the expediting of exploration and development on the OCS to achieve national economic goals at the expense of most of the other purposes of the Act such as, (1) the preservation, protection, and development of the oil and natural gas resources in a manner that is consistent with the need to make resources available to meet the Nation's energy needs, (2) balancing the development with protection of the human, marine, and coastal environments, (3) insuring the public a fair and equitable return on the resources of the OCS, (4) preserving and maintaining free enterprise competition, (5) providing States and local governments with comprehensive assistance in order to plan for any impact resulting from OCS development, and (6) assuring States will have adequate time and opportunity to fully participate in policy and planning decisions as they relate to the management of the OCS resources. As a result, I am concerned that the OCS leasing program, as it is presently constituted, will be the subject of litigation which will delay it unnecessarily. Appropriate steps could be taken at this time to more fully accommodate the concerns of many of the interested parties that would mitigate this possibility. What is your response?

Response. We believe that the purposes of the OCS Lands Act, including applicable ones paraphrased in your question from Sections 102(2)(A-D), and (4), have been fully met as a result of considering and balancing all of the specific factors which Sections 18(a)(2), 18(a)(3), and 18(a)(4) require be considered.

The proposed final program will meet the Nation's energy needs by expediting the inventorying and production of our offshore oil and gas resources. Two features of the program are especially important in this regard. First, the program emphasizes early and frequent entry into high potential areas, to the extent consistent with environmental and other Section 18 considerations. Second, the area-wide offering concept will result in consideration of entire planning areas and offering of broad areas that have potential for commercial quantities of oil and gas resources. This will allow testing of various exploration strategies and result in improved efficiency of exploration and development investments and earlier discoveries.

Balancing the development with protection of the human, marine and coastal environments was an important element of the overall Section 18 balancing. In preparation of the tentative proposed final program, transmitted to Congress in March 1982, the Department undertook a lengthy and detailed analysis to develop a program which would balance environmental and other factors included in Section 18. Some of the factors were quantified or partially quantified, to allow quantitative comparisons of OCS planning areas as an aid in achieving the required balancing. Other factors could only be considered qualitatively, and the overall balancing of quantitative and qualitative factors required that judgments be made, including judgments about how much relative weight each factor should receive. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit recognized that the Secretary has discretion as to the weight assigned for oil and gas exploration, development and production, environmental damage, and coastal zone impact in his balancing, and thus, his decision is of necessity a highly judgmental one, with some factors receiving more weight than others, as he considers necessary, to best meet national energy needs.

Based on the comments received on the tentative proposed final program, the Department reviewed the previously prepared comparative analysis of OCS planning areas to determine whether any changes were required. We then reviewed the judgments we had made and balancing we had done in developing the tentative proposed final program, also in light of comments received.

In response to State comments several changes were made.

In response to comments about the size of potential sale areas and the potential adverse effect on the ability of State and local governments to participate in pre-lease activities and plan for sale-related development, we divided the North Atlantic into two planning areas, and we divided sale 100—South Alaska, into three separate offerings. Additionally, we had responded earlier to comments from State and local governments by refining the original area-wide offering concept when we released the tentative proposed final program in March. Several States commented favorably on the refined area-wide approach in their comments on the tentative proposed final program.

Off Alaska, we have also slowed the pace of leasing in Norton Basin and deferred leasing in Hope Basin beyond the 5 years covered by the schedule. This is in addition to our earlier decisions to hold only one sale in the North Aleutian Basin in the 5-year period, and to consult with the Alaska Land Use Council before proceeding with the first sale in St. George Basin.

We believe the proposed final program represents a careful and appropriate balancing of all of the Section 18 factors and of the concerns and recommendations of State and local governments. The consideration given to Section 18 factors is more fully discussed in Enclosure 6 of the proposed final program transmitted to the Congress on May 11, 1982.

A fair and equitable return to the public on resources of the OCS will be insured by assuring receipt of fair market value, as required by Section 18(a)(4). This will be achieved by a system which relies more extensively than in the past on competition in the lease market. This system will also result in more efficient tract evaluation procedures. Procedures for assuring receipt of fair market value were improved by (1) providing for a reconsideration of the $150 per acre minimum bid based on experience and, (2) by deferring implementation of a rule which would have resulted in acceptance of all the high bids for all tracts on a geologic structure if the sum of the high bids exceeded the Department's estimate of the structure's value or the mean of the range of values for these tracts. The system developed to assure fair market value is flexible enough to allow development and validation of new evaluation techniques and adjustments of tract evaluation efforts in response to emerging patterns of competition and bidding.

The proposed final program will also help to preserve and maintain free enterprise competition through the area-wide offering concept. The lessening of government restrictions will provide increased opportunities for firms to compete using a variety of exploration strategies.

While Title I of the OCS Lands Act Amendments includes as a purpose providing States and local governments with comprehensive assistance to plan for OCS development impacts, we believe this purpose was intended to be fulfilled primarily by Title V of the Act, Amendments to the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, rather than by the 5-year leasing program. However, to the extent that assistance in planning includes the opportunity for States and local governments to fully participate in the leasing program, we believe that the proposed final program will provide appropriate participation. As discussed above, a number of changes were made to address State and local government comments when Section 18 balancing was reviewed. These changes were made in response to comments that the size of sale offerings would preclude effective participation.

The 5-year program we propose meets the legislative goal of assuring that States have adequate opportunity to participate in OCS policy and planning decisions. Several of those opportunities are established in the OCS Lands Act—Section 19, for example. Several result from the regulations implementing the National Environmental Policy Act. In addition, we plan to continue the operations of the Policy Committee of the ODS Advisory Board, the OCS Referral Center, and other coordination mechanisms.

The proposed final program represents a sound determination of the best balance between the potential for environmental damage, the potential for the discovery of oil and gas, and the potential for adverse effects on the coastal zone, as required by Section 18(a)(3). However, as recognized by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, the Secretary has discretion as to the weight to assign various factors in his balancing, and the various factors need not receive equal weight. As a result, his decision is necessarily judgmental.

Regardless of the balance achieved, there will always be parties who believe that the factors of most concern to them have not received enough weight. We do not believe that it is possible to make the program or individual sales litigation proof. We expect that the program transmitted to the President and Congress on May 11 will be litigated once it is approved in mid-July of this year. The June 1980 program was litigated and that litigation will likely be extended to the new program.

Litigation or the threat of litigation will always be a factor in the OCS program. It would be a mistake to proceed with a strategy of litigation avoidance as a major guiding principle in this important energy program. The best public policy is an honest effort to comply with the OCS Lands Act and other applicable legislation. Such compliance has been achieved in the proposed final program.

Question 2. In your response to the question relating to the effect that the proposed leasing schedule would have on the ability of the various State governments' ability to respond to the program, you indicated that there "should not be a problem." This seems to be a rather cavalier attitude to take in light of the fact that both California and Alaska on April 12 and 16, respectively, submitted extensive comments to DOI specifically pointing out areas of concern that DOI had not addressed despite the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia's October 6, 1981, opinion.

Does DOI plan to make any further modifications to the OCS leasing program as a result of either comments received or additional internal analyses?

Response. As indicated in response to your first question, we have divided the North Atlantic planning area into two areas, and have divided sale 100—South Alaska into three separate areas, both in response to State recommendations stemming from concerns about the ability to participate in prelease activities for potentially large sale areas. These changes, and the earlier decision to refine the area-wide offering concept to narrow the focus of pre-sale planning and analysis early in the process, respond to the major concern of States about ability to participate, i.e., that sale areas would be too large to enable State and local government to meaningfully participate in pre-lease decision or to plan for sale-related activities.

The proposed final program will result in one to four sales per year off Alaska (compared to one to three per year in the June 1980 program) which will require a substantial amount of State/Federal coordination. However, beyond the issue of the size of the sale areas involved, addressed above, and the timing of sales, which is based on a balancing of Section 18 factors, the proposed final program does nothing to diminish in any way the existing opportunities for State participation in the OCS leasing process for individual sales. We continue to believe that under the streamlined procedures and the new proposed final program, the States will continue to participate fully in the leasing process.

Question 3. As I am sure you are aware, there still exists a tremendous amount of concern regarding the balancing of interests as required by the OCSLAA. In terms of environmental protection, the State of Alaska has repeatedly provided DOI with comments that suggest that those concerns have not been properly and fully addressed. DOI, however, despite those concerns, notes that ". . . the excellent environmental record of the U.S. OCS oil and gas program, including the opportunity for mitigation specially tailored to individual situations . . ." indicates that no modifications to the program were in order and that environmental considerations have been appropriately considered. Please provide me with the number of exploratory wells drilled in extreme frontier regions in either Alaska or Canada where pack ice has been encountered. Indicate whether a sand and gravel island or a drilling rig was utilized. Please provide me with information relating to the opportunities for mitigating an oil spill in such an environment.

Response.

EXPLORATORY WELLS DRILLED IN EXTREME FRONTIER AREAS WHERE SEVERE ICE CONDITIONS HAVE BEEN ENCOUNTERED

	Number of wells [1]	Drilled from
Beaufort Sea	22	Artificial islands.
Offshore Canada	24	Ice islands.

Beaufort Sea	1	Ice island.
Offshore Alaska	10	Artificial islands. [2]
(State waters)	18	Natural islands.
Beaufort Sea	2	Artificial islands. [2]
Offshore Alaska

[1] All wells were drilled under landfast or fast floating ice conditions except for an estimated two to five wells drilled by the Canadians under true pack ice conditions.

[2] Includes sand, gravel, silt, and shell materials.

To date, the oil spill record for federally leased activities offshore Alaska has been a good one. As a result of exploration in three sale areas (Gulf of Alaska, Cook Inlet and the Beaufort Sea) and production of 730 million barrels of oil from Cook Inlet leases, no large oil spills (greater than 1,000 barrels) have occurred. Additionally, there have been no large spills from platforms during production of over 1.8 billion barrels of oil at Prudhoe Bay, which presents similar conditions as drilling and production from gravel islands such as those being used in the shallow areas of the Beaufort Sea.

However, in the event a spill does occur, there are several opportunities for mitigating an oilspill in such an environment. During the period when flow ice is frozen solid, oil which is spilled will be trapped beneath the ice with varying amounts of oil absorbed by the ice pack depending on ice type, oil type, and other factors. The oil is trapped by natural mechanisms and may be recovered by melting through the ice pockets and then recovering or burning the oil trapped in the pockets.

A similar situation exists for oil spilled on pack ice. It is trapped by natural conditions and may be recovered or burned. Either method in either situation is labor and time intensive.

An oilspill which occurs during open water conditions would be handled in the same fashion as a spill in other open water areas; recovery by any of several skimmers or other pickup devices, or dispersed, or coagulated by chemicals and recovered.

The worst possible situation that may be anticipated would be for an oilspill to occur during the periods of freeze-up or break-up, approximately 2 to 3 weeks each during a year. The effectiveness of any clean-up technology during either of these periods is severely restricted due to the presence of large amounts of floating ice.

The recovery of spilled oil by these various techniques ranges from about 10 to 50 percent. The most effective recovery method for subice spills demonstrated in one experiment was quite simply to wait until spring thaw and burn the oil as soon as it was freed. The recovery rate in this experiment was estimated at 90 percent. The Department, through the Mineral Management Service's Environmental Studies Program, is contributing funding to research concerning the fate of spilled oil in the Arctic and the most successful and safest methods for controlling these spills. The results of this and other research can be used in post-sale permitting decisions to ensure appropriate technology is employed to prevent and control oil spills.

Question 4. According to DOI's Oil and Gas Leasing and Production Program Annual Report for FY 1981, 374 leases were issued for a total of approximately 2,021,000 acres. Bonuses in the amount of $6,516,637,794 were received for those leases. In FY 1983, DOI is estmating that 1800 leases will be issued for approximately 10,260,000 acres. Estimated bonuses, contained in the April 10 update of the budget, total $10,900,000,000. That will yield an average of only $1,062 per acre. It has been repeatedly suggested that by making available 200 million acres of the OCS on an annual basis, that DOI is establishing a set of preconditions that will not permit the public to achieve true fair market value because you are creating an over supply situation at a time when demand is depressed. It appears that, from your own estimates, you are admitting that this situation will obtain. What is your response?

Response. Fair market value for a property right, such as that conveyed by an OCS lease, is clearly to be determined by reference to the market. Increasing the supply of tracts available for lease by the Federal Government may lower the average bonus per tract or per acre, but not in ways that prevent the government from receiving fair market value. One reason for the decrease in the average bonus is that many of the additional tracts leased will have poorer resource prospects and higher costs and risks than the tracts leased under previous, more restrictive leasing programs. The use of the average bonus for before and after comparison tends to obscure this change. Such a trend does not indicate failure to receive fair market value for the additional, lower value tracts leased.

It is also possible that the increased supply of tracts could result in lower bonuses even on tracts that may have been offered and leased under a more restrictive program. With regard to these tracts, the question is whether there is a way to determine the overall pace of leasing such that "true fair market value" would be recieved. On the one hand, it is possible to extract higher and higher average bonuses by offering fewer and fewer tracts for lease. The bonuses on some set of tracts can be increased by offering acreage at a slower pace. This practice would result in the government exercising its power as a monopolists in OCS leasing, causing the same net loss to the economy that exercise of private monoply would cause.

On the other hand, supply is one of the primary determinants of value in any market. From this perspective, whether or not transactions yield fair market value, depends less on the consideration that changes hands and more on the process by which that consideration is agreed upon. Thus, while average bonuses may be lower on some tracts because they are offered along with so many others, the lower bonuses can constitute fair market value, given that supply and other conditions of the bidding process meet the requirements of a fair market. The issue in this case is not that there is a change in the market, but whether it is still a fair market. The combination of the competitive, sealed bidding process and the Department's tract evaluation procedures will assure that the lease market yields fair transactions.

Aside from these general concepts, it is instructive to compare the "only $1,062 per acre" projected for FY 1983. In the 10 sales in 1980 and 1981, the average per acre received in any sale ranged from $29.95 per acre in sale RS-1 to $6,975.66 per acre in sale 53. The average per acre in 1980 and 1981 Gulf of Mexico sales ranged from $2,446.32 to $4,852.54 per acre. Clearly, what this demonstrates is the variability of bonuses, depending upon the perceived geologic potential, the degree of certainty, the relative costs of exploration, development and transportation, and other factors.

In FY 1983, there are scheduled two first-time frontier sales off Alaska, in addition to a repeat sale off Alaska. The risks and high costs associated with these sales would lead to an expectation of lower bonuses than in proven and less costly areas.

Finally, the 1800 leases-issued figure is a high estimate for FY 1983. Using the mean estimate of 1300 leases, the average would be $1471 per acre.

Question 5. The General Accounting Office, in testimony before the Subcommittee on the Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf on April 22, indicated that they were still concerned about the issue of the fair market evaluation of tracts after OCS lease sales have taken place. How much time, on a sale-by-sale basis, is going to be required to perform the evaluations?

Response. A substantial portion of the geological and geophysical data analysis and mapping of general engineering and economic data will be completed and updated on a continuing basis. Therefore, the groundwork for the post-sale evaluation will have been laid before the sale takes place.

Recommendations of tracts for further evaluation, and recommendations for acceptance of high bids on all other tracts—Phase I of the evaluation process—will take place within 3 days of the sale. We anticipate that 35–40 percent of the tracts receiving bids will be recommended for further evaluation and 60-65 percent will initially be recommended for acceptance. Consequently, we expect the majority of the tracts which received bids to be accepted within a matter of a few days after the sale.

The Phase II comparative evaluation, when and if validated, is to be completed within 3 weeks of the sale. It is envisioned that the majority of the high bids on the sampled tracts could be recommended, if found adequate, for acceptance within this period.

Those tracts for which a sufficient concern remains regarding receipt of fair-market value will then enter Phase III, consisting of a detailed resource economic value determination. Structures containing highest dollar bids, where practical, will be evaluated first. This phase is to be completed within 90 days of the sale. Recommendations on bid acceptance/rejection will be made as soon as the evaluations are completed; therefore, if the Phase II evaluation is used, very few tracts will require the entire 90 days for evaluation—probably no more than 20 percent of the tracts receiving bids.

In the event that the Phase II comparative evaluation is not implemented, the tracts selected for evaluation will receive the Phase III quantitative evaluation.

Question 6. DOI's OCS regulations (43 CFR 3316.5(e)) contain a provision that relates to the amount of time that DOI has to either accept or reject bids for OCS leases. At this time, DOI is required to make such a decision within 60 days after the lease sale. Is this amount of time sufficient in view of the anticipated workload relating to the fair market value evaluations? Under the existing leasing system, what was the average amount of time required to perform a fair market value evaluation?

Response. Under the current OCS leasing system, all decisions concerning bid acceptance or rejection have to be made within 60 days after the lease sale. This process is usually completed within 10 to 14 days. Under streamlined OCS leasing, 60 days will not be sufficient time to complete the three-phase post-sale analysis process required for a small percentage of the tracts. Ninety days will be necessary. Proposed revisions to the 43 CFR regulations were published in the Federal Register in Novemer 1981, including a proposal to extend this period. We expect to publish final regulations shortly. We cannot calculate what was the average time used to perform an evaluation. Work began on individual tracts sometimes 6 months prior to a sale with updating (because of new information) or completion just prior to a sale.

Question 7. Please provide a detailed explanation as to the factors that were considered by either OMB or DOI, in revising the OCS revenue estimates downwards. Please distribute the reductions over the individual lease sales scheduled for FY 1983.

Response. We have been advised by OMB that it has adjusted the estimates for OCS receipts for Fiscal Years 1982 thru 1985 as follows:

FY 1982—Increased estimated bonuses to reflect the results of sale 67 (about $300 million).

FY 1983—Lowered estimated bonuses to reflect the cancellation and postponement of sale 75 and sale 73 ($400 million).

—Lowered estimated bonuses because of uncertainty ($1.9 billion).

FY 1984—Increased estimated bonuses to reflect postponement of sale 73 ($400 million).

—Lowered estimated bonuses because of uncertainty ($1.6 billion).

FY 1985—Lowered estimated bonuses because of uncertainty ($0.8 billion).

The adjustments for uncertainty provide for uncertainty in the crude oil and capital markets and were not distributed by sale by OMB.

Question 8. Several major financial institutions engaged in financing OCS operations have taken issue with the estimated receipts for the FY 1983 proposed sales. They have indicated that the following factors have contributed to lower their expectations as to the bonuses that they believe the oil and gas industry is either willing or able to pay in FY 1983: (1) flattening of industry profits resulting in decreased cash flow, (2) high interest rates, (3) high risk and high cost of operations in frontier regions, and (4) decreased credit availability. Has DOI had any recent contact with financial institutions that will either confirm or refute those positions? Please provide a brief narrative as to the content of any discussions that have been held relating to this subject.

Response. Department staff have met with representatives of a number of financial institutions to discuss the relationship between financial conditions in the oil industry and the overall rate of investment in lease acquisitions and exploraton. These discussions have confirmed the view that these investments are financed primarily from earnings rather than outside financial sources. It is apparent that the oil industry will spend more money acquiring OCS leases and drilling exploratory wells when its profits are high than when its profits are low. It is less clear, however, how to determine what might be the amount of bonuses in a given year on the basis of financial statistics or economic forecasts. In the end, companies bid in response to their perceptions of specific prospects, shifting funds from one area of investment to another if the payoff appears to be sufficiently attractive. If the pre-sale evaluation of some of the OCS areas that will be offered turns out to indicate high promise, then firms would be able to bid more by foregoing investments in other areas, both OCS, onshore and foreign. While some general adjustment of receipt estimates for FY 1983 was warranted by financial conditions in the oil industry, sales in coming months will provide a better indication of these effects.

It is important to recognize that, while it is useful for Federal budgeting to consider the effects of financial conditions on bonus receipts, the current downswing in the oil industry is not reason to alter the leasing program for the next 5 years, leading to resource development stretching over decades. The proposed 5-Year Leasing Program will allow the oil industry to invest in OCS development in much the same fashion as in other sectors of the economy. During periods of economic decline, investment also declines, only to increase when economic growth resurges. The 5-Year Leasing Program will make leases available over a period of time so that firms will know that opportunities will be there when the investment funds are available.

Question 9. It appears as if the assumptions that were used to develop your sale-by-sale revenue estimates were based on the mean estimate of the undiscovered recoverable resources made by the United States Geological Survey. What has been the historical accuracy of the initial USGS resource estimates when compared to actual discoveries and proven reserves?

Response. The USGS only began developing resource estimates in a systematic way in 1975. Estimates are developed and reported in a probability distribution—that is, a range of values associated with a given probability of occurrence. The resource estimates are for the total undiscovered recoverable resources that may be discovered in a given area through time. Extensive exploration and delineation drilling is required before the amount of proven reserves in one find can be determined, and this requires several years. In conclusion, it is too early to evaluate the success of USGS undiscovered resource estimates in predicting ultimate discovered reserves.

We believe that, taken as a whole, the assumptions we used in making sale-by-sale revenue estimates were reasonable and conservative. The problem we face in estimating bonuses in FY 1983 and beyond is not only uncertainty about actual resources, but that very large areas will be offered for sale, and we must estimate how much of the area will actually receive bids. We believe that the revenue estimates are sound, since they are based on reasonable assumptions, taking into account uncertainties.

Question 10. Please provide me with a list of State submerged lands sales and their location in relation to DOI's planned OCS sales. Were these sales taken into consideration in developing DOI's 5-year plan? If not, why not? Also provide, if available, revenue estimates from those sales. Does DOI view those sales as being in competition with DOI's planned OCS lease sales? What were the anticipated effects on bonus revenue to DOI and was that taken into consideration in developing your revenue projections?

Response. To date, leases have been issued in State waters off of Texas, Louisiana, and Alabama; off of California in the Santa Barbara Channel and in the San Pedro area off of Los Angeles; and in the Upper Cook Inlet and Beaufort Sea off of Alaska.

In many cases, these State leases have directly influenced Federal lease sales. For example, leases in the Upper Cook Inlet had a direct influence on the evaluation of tracts offered in sale CI (1977). Mobil Oil's gas discovery on a State lease in Mobile Bay, Alabama, had a direct effect on sale 67, Gulf of Mexico (1980), in that the adjacent tract in Federal waters received the highest bid for that sale. In the State/Federal Beaufort Sea Sale (1979), 62 State tracts with a high bonus of $587 million were leased as compared to 24 Federal tracts with a high bonus of $589 million. These effects, however, are dependent upon drilling results and cannot be meaningfully estimated in advance. Therefore, effects of planned or potential State leasing on Federal revenues were not considered.

Regarding future State offshore lease sales, no lease sales are known to be planned for the east coast States. Although Delaware has expressed an interest in future offerings, no plans have been announced. All of the Gulf of Mexico States which have leased in the past intend to continue offshore leasing, as far as we know. In the past, Louisiana has had the most aggressive schedule, usually holding sales each month. Texas has periodic sales of both onshore and offshore leases. Alaska has a lease sale schedule which is attached. California has roughly 360,000 acres under lease in the Santa Barbara Channel and off Ventura and Huntington Beach. It is also studying a proposal to lease 40,000 acres offshore Santa Maria in Central California.

With the exception of Alaska and Louisiana, no State provided us with an indication of its offshore leasing plans when requested to provide the Department with its laws, goals and policies which should be considered in formulating the 5-year leasing program. Louisiana was concerned about possible adverse effects of Federal leasing on its own leasing. Alaska recommended that Federal and State sale schedules be consistent.

State offshore leasing was not explicitly considered in developing the proposed final program (however, cumulative environmental and socioeconomic effects of Federal and State leasing activities were considered in the supplement to the Final EIS covering the proposed final program). As long as we expect to continue importing oil, it is in the national interest to make Federal and State acreage available for exploration at a rapid pace. More rapid State leasing is not reason for slower Federal leasing. Additionally, there are significant differences in resource potential between State and Federal waters in many cases, and different pre-lease planning requirements. These lead to different conclusions about the appropriate location and timing of sales in State and Federal waters. Also, leasing programs of States may not have the same goals and objectives as those of the Federal OCS program which were established by the 1978 amendments to the OCS Lands Act. For these reasons, we do not view State sales as in competition with Federal sales.

Question 11. Have your assumptions regarding either the acreage to be leased or the resources necessary for the management of the program changed as a result of the April 10, reestimation of the receipts to be derived from the accelerated OCS leasing program? If so, please provide the revised estimates.

Response. The basis for the reestimate is explained in the response to question 7. These changes do not affect workload or other resource needs. As a practical matter, it is the expected results of leasing programs that lead to receipt estimates, not the other way around, as this question might suggest.

Question 12. There exists a concern on the part of some major firms that are active participants in OCS exploration and development that the tentative proposed final OCS leasing schedule will present a set of problems to the industry that may not be easily overcome. For example, a recent criticism of the schedule is that it will overload the industry's capabilities to properly evaluate, explore and subsequently develop the vast amount of acreage that is to be offered by DOI. What is your response to this?

Response. See the response to question No. 3 of your April 19, 1982, letter. In general, the offshore oil industry has been supportive of the proposed 5-Year OCS Leasing Program. There is no doubt that it will provide a challenge, particularly to individual firms. On the other hand, it is neither necessary or likely for industry to "evaluate, explore, and subsequently develop the vast amount of acreage that is to be offered." The intent of the revised program is to make available a wide range of opportunities for investment in evaluating and exploring the OCS. Firms may decide within their individual financial and technical capabilities where, when and how much to invest. The resulting process of inventorying and developing our OCS resources will be more efficient and expeditious than one that depended on the government's ability to evaluate and anticipate industry's "capabilities" and to plan a leasing program that is constrained by those estimated capabilities. The proposed 5-Year Program harnesses the strength of the free enterprise system to the potential of the OCS.

Question 13. In preparing the tentative proposed final 5-year leasing schedule did DOI take into account the world-wide exploration activities of those firms thought most likely to participate in OCS lease sales? Was any consideration given to the possibility that firms may be constrained from participating by other commitments in other OCS areas of interest?

Response. The program is based on the principle that firms should decide how to invest, on the basis of their commitments and resources, rather than having the government restrict the availability of opportunities for investment in inventorying the OCS on the basis of questionable estimates of commitments and capabilities. A resource development program limited by past "commitments" would never provide the opportunities for rapid deployment of our Nation's economic resources in response to potentially great pay-off. The marketplace, rather than the government planner's office, is the best place for decisions on commitments to be made. See also the response to question #3 of your April 19, 1982, letter.

Question 14. How many rigs and what type (i.e., jack-up, semisubmersibles, etc.,) will be required over the course of the full 5-year leasing schedule should it fully meet your projections as to the amount of acreage leased? How many exploration wells are you projecting will be drilled and in which planning areas?

Response. The Final Supplement to the EIS on the 5-year program estimates a total of over 1500 exploration wells. This number is based on conditional resource estimates (assuming commercial discoveries in each area) and could be reduced if early exploration efforts in some planning areas are not successful. All types of drilling rigs are expected to be required, but total number of rigs and number of each type was not estimated. Comments from support industries indicated that drilling equipment should not constrain OCS development. (See response to question #3 of your April 19, 1982, letter.) The program has been developed on the assumption that equipment will be built and manufactured to meet whatever demands result from leasing activity under the schedule. Increases in the supply of the rigs, etc. over the past few years have indicated that this assumption is well founded.

Question 15. It appears as if, at this time, the construction of the Alaskan Natural Gas Transportation System (ANGTS), is uncertain. In your ranking of the Diapir field, you assumed 14.8 TCF of gas could be produced, and one assumes, transported through the ANGTS pipeline. Is it not appropriate to review the placement of the Diapir field on your leasing schedule in view of the fact that the net economic value of the field may be substantially reduced because of the unavailability of the means to transport the gas to the marketplace? Your views on this would be appreciated.

Response. The effect on net economic value of not producing gas discovered in the Diapir field was examined in response to comments received on the tentative proposed Final 5-year OCS Leasing Program. While its net economic value would be reduced from $47 billion to $25 billion, the Diapir Field's ranking among OCS planning areas would drop only from fourth to sixth. This would not substantially alter the placement of the area in the leasing schedule. Early exploration is warranted by the potential oil discoveries. Discoveries of gas during this process could be considered in investment decisions concerning the Alaskan Natural Gas Transportation System.

Question 16. In your response to a question contained in my letter of April 19, regarding the effects that DOI's tentative proposed final leasing schedule would have on competition, you indicated that no study had been performed relating to this issue. How did you propose to balance the various policy considerations contained in the OCSLAA without any information upon which to base decisions? You indicated that you analyzed and "considered" a variety of comments in formulating the program. Generally, what was the substance of the comments? How did you take them into consideration in formulating the program?

Response. The fact that no study had been done on the effects of the leasing program on competition does not mean that there was no information on that subject upon which to base decisions. In fact, a substantial discussion of the role of competition and the effect of the role of leasing on competition was provided in the Secretarial Issue Document of March 1, 1982 (see Appendix 3 to that document).

Comments received on the effects of the proposed program on competition fell generaly into two sets. One view was that competition has been inadequate and would be decreased by offering OCS acreage more rapidly. The other view was that competition has been intense, particularly on better prospects and will continue to be an adequate basis for assuring receipt of fair market value. Consideration of these comments is reflected in the Secretary's decision to move forward with an aggressive leasing program, placing greater reliance on the competitive bidding process to assure receipt of fair market value, while retaining procedures for government evaluation of a significant portion of the tracts receiving bids.

Question 17. Please provide a synopsis of comments received to date relating to the tentative proposed final OCS oil and gas leasing schedule.

Response. Enclosure 9B of the letter sending the proposed final program to the President of the Senate contains a synopsis of comments received on the tentative proposed final program. A copy is attached.

TAX EQUITY AND FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss my reasons for voting against the 1982 tax bill passed by the Senate yesterday. This was not an easy vote because the bill contained several provisions, such as those affecting multinational oil companies and mergers, which I believe were meaningful attempts at tax reform. It was also not an easy vote because I am fully aware of the need to reduce the Federal deficit in fiscal year 1983 and beyond. On Wednesday I voted for the reconciliation bill which will cut spending in important programs by over $13 billion over the next 3 years. On Tuesday I voted against the defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1983 because it called for more spending than a secure national defense required or a struggling economy could stand. And yesterday one part of me would have liked to vote for another deficit reduction measure.

But after carefully analyzing all of the individual provisions of the tax bill, I came to the conclusion that it was too high of a price to pay. Many aspects of the bill were troubling to me. Three of them were as follows:

First, the provision on additional weeks of unemployment compensation was a stopgap measure which would carry the politicians, and, incidentally, the unemployed through the election. It will take the wind out of the sails of a movement for more basic reform of the unemployment compensation system which would have benefited Michigan and similar States with high unemployment more than the one in the tax bill. The basic reform stood a reasonably good chance of passage this year.

The unemployment benefits provision creates the illusion that high unemployment States have nothing more to worry about, when in reality it will, I am afraid, foreclose the possibility of meaningful reform. On paper it may look like the bill gives Michigan 10 additional weeks of unemployment benefits. But actually, within 2 months, when it is likely that Michigan will trigger off extended benefits, it will give many of the unemployed in Michigan fewer weeks of extended unemployment compensation than they would have been eligible for if the mistakes in last year's reconciliation bill had never taken place or had been corrected this year. In last year's bill not only did the Congress schedule an increase in the trigger for extended unemployment benefits for weeks beginning after September 25, 1982, but it also modified the formula by which a State determines whether it reaches that new and higher trigger. This modification took the form of excluding individuals who have exhausted their extended benefits—weeks 27 through 39—from the calculation of the insured unemployment rate. For a State like Michigan, which has endured over 30 months of double-digit unemployment, this change in the formula can be devastating. What it says, in a sense, is that too many people in Michigan have been unemployed for too long to be eligible for long-term benefits. Such illogic demands fundamental reform, and what the Congress did in passing the tax bill was to create a smokescreen obscuring the need for reform and what will make less likely that otherwise very likely reform.

The practical impact of the unemployment provisions of the tax bill is that unemployed individuals in Michigan who exhaust their first 26 weeks of benefits in October will probably only be eligible for 10 weeks of benefits on top of the basic 26 weeks because Michigan will not be able to reach the new higher triggers for the normal 13-week extended benefit program. Basically, it comes down to this: If we had engaged in meaningful reform, States such as Michigan would have been eligible for 39 weeks of unemployment benefits in October, whereas the tax bill, in effect, sets a limit of 36 weeks. Furthermore, after March 31, 1983, when the tax bill's provisions expire, there is the very real possibility that States will still be enduring historically high rates of unemployment without being eligible for an extended benefits program. And if I might be cynical for just a brief moment, at that time there will not be the pressure of an oncoming election for the passage of even a stopgap program for additional unemployment benefits.

Second, I was opposed to both the substance and the process of the provision which would have imposed upon restaurants reporting requirements with respect to tip income. These complex and burdensome requirements defy the imagination. Let me pose just a few of the questions which come to mind: In light of the fact that in many restaurants the turnover rate of tipped employees is quite high, will this requirement place an undue regulatory burden on some employers? Will the distinction required between table or carryout service place additional burdens on employers by requiring separate cash registers or tape computerization systems? Will the system of allocating 8 percent of gross receipts allow employers to practice favoritism, harass, pressure, or otherwise place unreasonable demands on employees? I cannot really believe that people who have for years urged that the Federal Government get out of the marketplace and out of the lives of individuals, are really proposing this bureaucratic nightmare.

Further, when there was a separate vote on the tip provision at the time the Senate first considered this bill, the tip provision was overwhelmingly defeated. But, nevertheless, the will of the Senate was ignored, after the will of the House had never even been tested, and this provision was added back in the bill in an eye-blurring marathon conference session. This arbitrary procedure is no way to enact a provision which could have such an intrusive impact on the lives of individuals.

Third, I was greatly concerned that the conference committee gutted an amendment which I offered to the withholding provision of the Senate version of the tax bill. This amendment would have required the Treasury to issue regulations to exempt financial institutions which could not comply with the withholding requirement without an undue burden. The original Senate bill, before my amendment, had a similar provision, but it only applied to small financial institutions and was open ended with respect to time. My amendment did not make any distinction with respect to the size of the financial institution and was still open ended. However, the conference committee agreement put a 6-month time limit on this provision. That change went a long way in watering down my original intent and hoped-for effect.

I believe that there was a better tax bill alternative. During the consideration of the Finance Committee version, Senator BRADLEY offered a substitute which would have preserved the benefits of the third year of the administration's tax cut for 85 percent of our taxpayers by asking for sacrifice from the most advantaged members of our country. The President said that the tax bill he was supporting this year would not harm the average working person. And nor would have Senator BRADLEY's. The difference was the Senator BRADLEY's amendment removed the need to impose regressive excise taxes as a way of making up additional revenue. The country would have been better served, in terms of basic equity, the Bradley proposal had been adopted in the place of the bill the Senate passed yesterday.

In conclusion, Mr. President, the tax bill which the Senate voted on yesterday had many good elements to it, but in my view, they could not outweigh the bad or questionable.

ANNIVERSARY OF SOVIET INVASION OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, August 21 is the 14th anniversary of the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, a day of sorrow for freedom-loving peoples everywhere.

The Czechoslovak people have set an outstanding example for all the captive nations. They have never accepted the Soviet occupation, and in 1977 more than 1,000 courageous Czechoslovak citizens signed Charter 1977, which petitioned the authorities to adhere to the Helsinki Final Act which both Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union had signed 2 years earlier.

The Charter 77 movement has persisted in Czechoslovakia despite severe repression. Last month, our own U.S. Helsinki Commission published a compilation of Charter 77 petitions which are testimony to the indomitable spirit of the people of Czechoslovakia.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON TAX BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the tax conference report of H.R. 4961, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982. Mr. President, this has been a difficult vote for many of my colleagues because this measure includes both positive and negative features. I could not, however, support this conference report because of several provisions which affect low- and middle-income taxpayers.

For example, Mr. President, I am deeply disappointed in the ruling of the Chair concerning the germaneness of the tip-reporting provision in the conference report. This part of the conference report was stricken from the Senate bill, and there was no such provision in the House bill. I am opposed to the tip-reporting provision, particularly, because of its dramatic impact on employees and employers in my State of Nevada. The reporting requirements represent an onerous burden to employers and to tipped food and beverage employees.

In addition, I could not support the adoption of a 10-percent withholding on interest and dividends. This means yet another burden on the already-beleagured savings and loan institutions, and I believe that the cost of administering this provision will greatly outweigh the projected revenue to be gained from its adoption. I am thankful, however, that exemptions were provided, at least, for the elderly and those with very low incomes.

While I am glad that an airport and airway development bill was approved because it is important to our Nation's airport development, I am gravely dismayed that there were increases in general aviation taxes. I could not support the 8-cent-per-gallon increase in aircraft gasoline fuels, or the 3-percent increase in the air passenger ticket tax, or the reimposition of the international departure ticket tax. This is such a high amount for operation and maintenance, particularly when there is a substantial balance in the existing trust fund of some $2 billion.

Another provision I could not support, Mr. President, is the telephone excise tax increase which rises from 1 percent to 3 percent from 1983 through 1985. This is yet another burden on low- and middle-income taxpayers who are already shouldering a heavy tax burden, while working to make ends meet.

I also object to the medical expense deduction provision which limits the amount of medical expenses that taxpayers can deduct. Here, especially, Mr. President, is an area that is so vital to Americans—health. Each year, with rising health costs, it becomes harder and harder for the average American to afford adequate health care.

While I am pleased to see the additional weeks of unemployment benefits added in the conference report, I do not think that the conferrees went far enough in modifying the law with regard to extended benefits. With this Nation's unemployment rate at such a peak, I think this is one of our most urgent priorities.

And finally, Mr. President, I am concerned about the affect that the medicare cuts will have on its beneficiaries.

I should say, Mr. President, that I am pleased that this bill has taken steps to remedy the tax situation with respect to safe harbor leasing. I have advocated the repeal of at least half of the tax benefits approved in last summer's tax bill.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, there are too many provisions in this conference report that I could simply not support. I have enumerated the key ones for the record. For this reason, and at the urging of the majority of my constituency, I could not vote for this $98.3 billion tax increase bill—the largest in history.

JAPAN'S LATEST DEFENSE BUDGET DECISIONS FAIL TO MEET COMMITMENTS; DESPITE HEADLINES, PROGRAM THREATENS UNITED STATES-JAPAN MUTUAL SECURITY; CONGRESS MUST APPLY PRESSURE BY PASSING SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 46

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, earlier this week, the Senate approved the conference report on the Fiscal 1983 Defense Authorization Act.

This defense budget, which contains many programs needed to maintain and improve our national security, and several which are not, imposes substantial burdens on the American taxpayers.

Out taxpayers are becoming increasingly concerned about these burdens, expecially while the Federal Government is drastically reducing its commitment to important domestic programs.

As this concern mounts, I think it is instructive for the Congress to keep uppermost in mind the contrasts between our own efforts to defend ourselves and our allies in NATO Europe and Japan, and the contributions these other nations make to the common security.

I have spoken out may times on this issue, because as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I am confronted almost daily with the growing magnitude of American defense budgets and the insufficient military efforts of many of our allies.

While several of our NATO allies are contributing far less than their fair shares to the common defense, the prime offender—the nation which has contributed the least to our mutual security but which has the capability to contribute the most—is Japan.

I would like to focus the attention of the Senate on Japan's meager self-defense efforts at this time for two reasons.

First, in 10 days in Honolulu, Hawaii, senior American and Japanese defense and foreign affairs officials will meet to discuss mutual defense needs and each nation's contributions to satisfy them. This group, known as the Security Subcommittee of the United States-Japan Security Consultative Committee, was established to help implement the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security between our two countries.

I want to urge the American members of this subcommittee, as strongly as I can, to candidly inform their Japanese counterparts that their nation continues its failure to meet its common defense commitments, that the recent defense budget decisions in Tokyo—by their many inadequacies—threaten United States-Japan security, and that Japan must rid itself of the complacency which marks its self-defense efforts.

The American representatives should determine to the Japanese that their business as usual attitudes toward their own self-defense needs and their commitments to our mutual security are becoming more and more unacceptable to the American people. Our officials should deliver this message loudly and clearly, without any of the diplomatic niceties which usually obscure such discussions, and they should prevail upon the Japanese representatives that Japan must increase its defense spending.

Second, I want to present further troubling evidence why our representatives should adopt this determined position at the Security Subcommittee sessions, and why the Senate should pass—as soon as possible after the Labor Day recess—Senate Concurrent Resolution 46, my resolution calling upon Japan to meet its mutual security commitments by significantly increasing its annual defense spending, as it has promised to do.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 46 is cosponsored by a majority of the Senate—53 of us to be exact. It reflects a dissatisfaction with Japanese defense contributions held by Americans throughout our Nation, not just by those who are experiencing hard economic times due to Japan's discriminatory trade policies. The cosponsors represent all regions of the United States, both parties and all positions on the political spectrum.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 46 is a moderate measure, Mr. President. In fact, some of my colleagues consider it too modest in its tone. But is sends a clear signal to the people of Japan from the people of the United States. I shall insert its text into the RECORD at the conclusion of my statment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. LEVIN. The Foreign Relations Committee already has held hearings on this legislation, and I want to express my thanks to Chairman PERCY and Senators HAYAKAWA and GLENN for their cooperation in expeditiously considering Senate Concurrent Resolution 46.

The Senate should overwhelmingly endorse Senate Concurrent Resolution 46, Mr. President.

Not to do so would demonstrate incredible insensitivity to the American taxpayers and would undermine the efforts of the executive branch to urge the Japanese to increase their defense spending annually.

The executive branch is not being aggressive enough as it is in such endeavors. Congress needs to push it further, as well as to show the Japanese that there is no division within the U.S. Government on this issue. Passage of Senate Concurrent Resolution 46 would apply reasonable and appropriate pressure on both the executive branch and on the Japanese Government.

The requirement for passage of Senate Concurrent Resolution 46 has become even more pressing in light of the Japanese Government's decisions late last month about its 1983–87 defense program.

The press greeted Japan's decisions to nominally increase defense spending in 1983, and to increase military hardware procurement between 1983–87, as a positive step.

Upon close examination, however, these decisions are a further set back to American efforts to convince Japan to increase defense spending and a further widening of the growing gap between Japanese rhetoric and actions about how they will expand their efforts to meet their common security commitments.

Just 1 year ago, in May 1981, Japan's Prime Minister Suzuki made such a commitment after his summit meeting with President Reagan. He promised Japan would make "even greater efforts" to improve its self-defense capabilities. More importantly, he declared it was Japan's policy to defend the sea space for several hundred miles around the home islands and the sea lanes of communication out to 1,000 nautical miles from Japan.

Japan is now unable to accomplish this mission, and it has been calculated it would require between 10 and 12 percent annual growth in defense spending, after inflation, between 1983 and 1987 for that nation to achieve these capabilities by the end of this decade, if then.

Japan's 1983 increase over 1982 represents only about $760 million, which will not even buy one capable destroyer these days. Since it will be spread around the entire defense budget, its impact on improving the self-defense forces will be even further diluted.

The nominal increase is also well below the nominal 11 percent growth recommended by Japan's own defense agency, the reported 10 percent real growth suggested by the United States, and the calculations by Japanese experts of the annual growth needed to meet the 1,000-mile sealane defense commitment.

Detailed analysis of the increase also shows that most of it does not embody new efforts to improve Japan's self-defense forces but instead represents present funding of past limited initiatives. One Japanese Defense Agency official has stated that almost all of the 1983 increase consists of outlays for previously obligated programs. To take credit for these programs now would be a form of double counting, and the Japanese deserve no credit for such an exercise.

It has been calculated by knowledgeable sources that just to meet these past obligations and to finance the normal operations and maintenance of Japan's existing forces would have required a 9.1 to 9.7 percent nominal increase in 1983. Thus, there may well be a real decline in Japan's military capabilities because of its insufficiency.

This low growth in 1983, coupled with the inadequate program planned for the following 4 years, insures that Japan's promised improvements to meet its policy commitments, especially the 1,000 nautical miles pledge, will be delayed even further beyond 1990. The Director General of the Defense Bureau of the Japanese Defense Agency even admitted this at a press conference after the 1983–87 plan was announced.

Our own defense plan maintains an average 6.5 percent annual real growth in 1983–87.

Furthermore, the 1983–87 projections will postpone, even longer, completion of Japan's military improvement program established in 1976—a program now recognized as outdated and deficient by the Japanese themselves in light of expanded Soviet military capabilities in the Far East.

Much has been reported about how the 1983–87 midterm defense program increases the number of aircraft and ships to be purchased for Japan's arsenal. Unfortunately, careful scrutiny discloses that this program still buys far fewer P–3C antisubmarine patrol aircraft, F–15 air defense interceptors, submarines and ships than are necessary to carry out the 1,000 mile sea lane defense policy.

Most shocking is that this 5-year program makes only marginal improvements in the defense budget area acknowledged to be the weakest link in Japan's self-defense chain—logistics and sustainability. Even the limited numbers of aircraft and ships being purchased will do little good if the pilots and sailors aboard them run out of ammunition and fuel. All three self-defense forces—Army, Maritime, and Air Force—suffer from this condition.

The Executive Director of Tokyo's Research Institute for Peace and Security, Seiichiro Onishi, recently was reported to conclude: "The priority is on mainstay items, but in logistical support, there is a shortage." Despite U.S. requests that Japan stockpile a 3-month supply of ammunition, for example, the Nation continues to maintain only a half-month's supply, it has been reported.

Mr. President, with our own defense concerns in the Persian Gulf and Pacific Ocean regions I do not think we should have to worry about our Japanese ally running out of bullets, bombs, aircraft missiles, spare parts, and gasoline.

Finally, much will be made in the near future about how Japan's annual defense spending soon will approach or exceed 1 percent of its gross national product (GNP), a statistic which has been the magic ceiling beyond which no Japanese Government has recently dared to go for fear of public rejection. The 1983–87 program will be given credit for reaching this milestone, which many of us have been urging for several years.

Americans should not be deceived by this occurrence, because it will be much more a product of slower-than-expected growth in Japan's GNP than it will be due to substantial increases in defense spending. Breaking the 1 percent of GNP barrier will be a statistical event. It will not mean Japan is meeting its self-defense and mutual security commitments by devoting sufficient national resources to improving its military.

Until Japan meets these commitments with adequate budget resources, the Japanese should understand that breaking the 1 percent of GNP barrier will not be praised in the United States. They should understand that the sophisticated observers in the Congress, the executive branch and the American public will not stop urging Japan to increase its self-defense capabilities and budget in substantial, meaningful ways.

Mr. President, Japan's new 5-year defense program is a major disappointment, not a cause for celebration. At the end of this program, with the Japanese forces which are to be purchased and maintained between 1983–87, if the Soviets were to try to sever Japan's sea lines of communication out to 1,000 miles from the home islands, Japan's economy probably would collapse and its freedom would be threatened.

I hope our representatives underscore this conclusion to their Japanese counterparts at the Security Subcommittee meeting. I hope they also urge them to reconsider the present 1983–87 program with the goal of expanding it to develop Japanese capabilities for a sustainable self-defense out to 1,000 miles by 1990. I also hope they ask the Japanese to increase their contributions to the support of U.S. forces based in Japan, in light of these present inadequacies in Japan's defense efforts.

Japan can accomplish all this during its final budget deliberations later this year.

The American people are united in urging this reversal of Japan's present, inadequate self-defense course. I am confident that the Senate will reflect this sentiment by adopting Senate Concurrent Resolution 46 by a resounding vote. I urge my colleagues to do so, and I hope the Japanese Government will be paying attention.

EXHIBIT 1

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 46—Concurrent Resolution Relating to Mutual Security Efforts of the United States and Japan

Mr. LEVIN submitted the following concurrent resolutoin: which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"S. CON. RES. 46

"Whereas current international developments indicate the need for greater efforts on the part of the United States and is allies in defending democratic values and ideals;

"Whereas the joint communique recently signed by Japan's Prime Minister Suzuki and President Reagan recognizes that the alliance between the United States and Japan is built upon shared values of democracy and liberty;

"Whereas the United States-Japan Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security states that the parties will maintain and develop their capacities to resist armed attack;

"Whereas, in the joint communique signed by Prime Minister Suzuki and President Reagan, the Prime Minister stated that Japan will seek to make even greater efforts for improving its defense capabilities; and

"Whereas Japan has demonstrable economic strength and yet contributes less of its national resources for defense expenditures than any country of comparable economic base: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that both the United States and Japan should exert maximum efforts to resist Soviet challenges to security and democracy in Asia.

"SEC. 2. It is further the sense of the Congress that Japan should make a greater contribution to its own defense so that a full partnership and closer cooperation in sharing the burden of common defense can be achieved, thereby enhancing the combined effectiveness of Japanese and United States defense forces in preserving peace and security in Asia.

"SEC. 3. It is further the sense of the Congress that, as a tangible sign of commitment to these aims, the Government of Japan should increase its defense expenditures to the level of at least 1 per centum of that country's gross national product."

SOVIET DAY OF SHAME

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today marks the 14th anniversary of the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia, now known as the "Soviet Day of Shame." It is important that the United States—a country dedicated to national self-determination and democratic and humanitarian ideals—commemorate this day by honoring those brave Czechs who refuse to relinquish their pursuit of political and civil liberties and of fundamental human rights. In observing the "Soviet Day of Shame" we not only honor the Czechs, but we rebuke Soviet intervention and repression in a land whose people yearn to live in a more democratic society.

The struggle to establish a freer society predates 1968. In 1918, Czechoslovakia was the first among Eastern European countries to become a liberal democratic polity. A Communist coup in 1948 negated strides taken toward democracy. Yet it did not diminish the freedom-loving spirit of the Czechoslovakian people.

In 1968, for a regrettably brief period, Czechoslovakia enjoyed the reinstitution of a more liberal society. Under the rule of Alexander Dubcek, a program entitled the action program was introduced. Although it maintained the primacy of the Central Party, it substantially reduced the party's role in national life, while calling for expanded political and civil liberties and lifting of restrictions on media, cultural events, education, and religious practices. No sooner had the Communist-imposed bans been lifted, than the Soviets (fearing a diminution of control) invaded the small country, squelched the democratic advances and reimposed a government sympathetic to Moscow.

On the pretext that the Czechs had violated the Warsaw Pact, the Soviets ordered a "normalization process." The so-called "normalization" resulted in abnormalities in the political, cultural, and religious lives of the Czechs. "Normalization" gave rise to a society where party dogma determined and permeated every aspect of Czechoslovakian life. Czechoslovakian resistance to Soviet sanctions, to this day, leads to imprisonment and persecution. A particularly noteworthy and courageous group of citizens signed two documents, "Charter 77" and "Petition 78", which reveal the atrocities their fellow countrymen suffered and continue to suffer at the hands of the Soviets.

After 14 years, the situation in Czechoslovakia remains grim. It is appropriate that we denounce Soviet transgression of international accords and subjugation of the Czechoslovakian people today, as we did in 1968. In recognizing this day, in some small measure, we may help alleviate their suffering and let them know that we support their struggle to achieve a state where the Czechs will determine the political future of Czechoslovakia.

THE SOVIET DAY OF SHAME

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, August 21 marks the 14th anniversary of that day in 1968 when the Soviet Union, in blatant violation of the United Nations Charter, brutally invaded Czechoslovakia with 600,000 Soviet and Warsaw Pact troops, thereby extinguishing the flames of freedom and liberty which had begun to burn so brightly in Prague that spring.

During 1968, the Czech and Slovak peoples began an unprecedented experiment in "socialism with a human face." Acting in accordance with the principle of "sovereign equality" of all members of the United Nations, Czech and Slovak reformers set out to combine socialism with democracy and economic security with civil liberties. The role of the Communist Party, which had ruled Czechoslovakia for 20 years with an iron fist, was weakened. Censorship was abolished and, as a result, the press, radio, and television became "schools of democracy." The despicable acts of the Communist Party—the purges, trials, tortures, executions, denial of human rights—were being brought to light, publicly discussed and criticized. The people of Czechoslovakia, who had had a tradition of pluralist democracy before the imposition of communism in February 1948, soon began to discredit the system of one-party rule by the Communist Party. Civil liberties were restored; political prisoners were rehabilitated. The people of Czechoslovakia began to enjoy some of the freedoms which we, in the West, so often take for granted.

As a Foreign Service officer who had established our Consulate Consul at Bratislava, in Czechoslovakia, shortly after the Communist coup of 1948, I saw firsthand how the Czech and Slovak peoples were robbed of fundamental freedoms and basic human rights. In 1968, these brave people made great strides toward regaining these rights and humanizing the Communist system under which they had lived for 20 years. In fact, Czechoslovakia became the most liberalized state in Eastern Europe. One can imagine how high the flames of freedom and liberty would have risen had not Soviet-led tanks and troops stormed into Czechoslovakia on that fateful day of shame in August. The Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia under the banner of "proletarian internationalism" abruptly ended the Czechoslovakian experiment in "socialism with a human face" and forcibly prevented the people of Czechoslovakia from shaping their own future.

I have been deeply interested in Czechoslovakia since serving there 35 years ago. Since then I have followed events in Czechoslovakia with particular concern and visited there as often as I could, including just before and just after the Soviet invasion of 1968. In addition, as a member and former cochairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I have continued to be involved with affairs in Eastern Europe.

I was encouraged for a short time in the mid-1970's after the Soviet Union signed the Helsinki Final Act. By signing that document, the Soviets agreed that "no consideration may be invoked to serve to warrant resort to the threat or use of force." However, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in December 1979 shows that the Soviet Union has not abandoned aggression as a means of undermining the political independence and sovereignty of its neighbors. In addition, Soviet involvement in the situation in Poland and support for the Polish Government, which has waged an excessive and heinous campaign of repression against the Polish people since the imposition of martial law in December 1981, demonstrates that the Soviet Union has wanton disregard for the fundamental freedoms and the rights of the individual.

Similarly, the present government of Czechoslovakia has failed to fulfill obligations undertaken in the Helsinki Final Act, especially in the area of human rights. The continued imprisonment of Vaclav Havel and other leaders of the Charter 77 movement and of the committee for the Defense of the Unjustly Persecuted and increased pressure on religious activists make a mockery of the human rights provisions of the Final Act.

As we commemorate the 14th anniversary of the Soviet Day of Shame, it is fitting and proper that we remind the Soviet Union and the present regime in Czechoslovakia that the world is watching to see how they live up to obligations assumed in the United Nations Charter, the Helsinki Final Act, and other international covenants. Continued failure to fulfill the letter and the spirit of these agreements will have a major impact on future relations with the West. In particular, both governments must start respecting the human rights of people living within their borders, and the sovereign rights of nations along their borders. The tragic events of August 21, 1968, must not be repeated yet again.

"A MILESTONE FOR RHODE ISLAND'S FEDERAL JUDGES"

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, last month the Federal District Court for the District of Rhode Island marked an important watershed. After 16 years of outstanding service on the Federal court, including the past 11 years as chief judge for the Rhode Island District, Raymond J. Pettine attained his 70th birthday and assumed the role of senior judge. Replacing him as chief judge is Francis J. Boyle, who for the past 5 years has served excellently and ably as a district judge. Simultaneously, President Reagan, at the recommendation of my colleague Senator CHAFEE, nominated Bruce J. Selya to fill the vacancy created by Judge Pettine's assumption of senior status. Mr. Selya's nomination has just been confirmed by the Senate this week, and he will shortly take his place alongside Chief Judge Boyle on our Federal court.

Raymond J. Pettine has been one of our Nation's most hard-working and scholarly Federal judges. His remarkable diligence and conscientious legal research produced opinions noted for their depth and scholarship. His decisions in many areas of law are of truly national significance, and have been referred to time and time again in other judicial decisions as well as legal publications and law school textbooks (Judge Pettine once told an interviewer that one of his proudest moments came when his son-in-law studied several of his decisions in law school).

Most notably, Judge Pettine's decisions reflect his sense of fairness and deeply felt concern for the human condition. His record on the Federal court is a tribute to his compassion and genuine humanitarian instincts. Many, many landmark Pettine decisions have opened the door to greater opportunity and a better life for the citizens who came into his courtroom.

Rhode Island is fortunate to have as fine a judge as Francis J. Boyle to succeed Raymond Pettine in the important role of chief judge. I have been privileged to know Frank Boyle as an attorney and leading citizen of my State for over three decades. Before his nomination to the Federal court, he was a highly respected trial attorney for 25 years, and a leading member of numerous civic, educational, religious, and professional organizations.

In his 5 years of service as a Federal judge, Judge Boyle has greatly distinguished himself and earned the respect of his fellow judges and the Federal court bar in Rhode Island. His workload has been an arduous one, and he has presided over a number of complex trials covering a wide range of legal issues. He possesses every quality of integrity, diligence, and professional excellence that a Federal judge should possess, and I know he will be a superb chief judge.

Bruce M. Selya is a welcome addition to our Federal court. He has been a leading trial attorney in Rhode Island for many years, and is a man of demonstrated professional achievement. I would point out that Mr. Selya is badly needed on the Rhode Island district court at this time. Our judges are among the very busiest in the Nation in terms of the number of civil and criminal cases handled by each judge. As of June 30, 1981, the Rhode Island district ranked sixth out of the Nation's 95 judicial districts in the number of pending cases per judge.

Rhode Island has been extremely fortunate to be served by a succession of outstanding Federal judges. Chief Judge Boyle, Senior Judge Pettine, and judge-designate Selya are very much a part of that tradition, and as their careers enter this new phase, it is appropriate that we recognize this important milestone for the district court in Rhode Island.

THE A.T. & T. SETTLEMENT

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, yesterday the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and the Department of Justice announced that they have agreed to terms which will settle their 8-year-old antitrust case. The results of this settlement are truly unprecedented. It will dramatically restructure the largest corporation in the world. And, it will help to assure America's leadership in telecommunications, perhaps the most dynamic sector of our economy, by bringing to the marketplace an A.T. & T. able to become a more vigorous competitor.

At the same time, the settlement contains safeguards absolutely essential to prevent anticompetitive conduct and to protect and promote the public interest. These safeguards would not be a part of the settlement were it not for modifications insisted upon by U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene, modifications which Judge Greene realized were necessary after reviewing the proposed consent decree under the procedures and duties established by Congress in the Tunney Act.

United States against American Telephone & Telegraph Co., was one of the largest and perhaps most significant cases in the history of our antitrust laws. And, its settlement was the first time a case of this magnitude had been reviewed in light of the Tunney Act. The crucial protections that Judge Greene insisted upon and that the parties accepted are proof the act works as Congress intended. More importantly, they are a major victory for the American people.

With the Tunney Act, Congress ordered the process of approving antitrust settlements opened to public scrutiny and input. Too often, before the Tunney Act, consent decrees seemed to appear from nowhere. Too often, they seemed sweetheart deals between the Government and the defendants. So in the Tunney Act, Congress ordered all proposed settlements to be made public. Interested parties were to be given opportunity to comment. Judges were instructed to look beyond antitrust laws and the party litigants to determine whether a decree was equitable; they were instructed to accept only those decrees which were in the public interest.

Judge Greene, in reviewing the A.T. & T. settlement, has demonstrated the importance of the public's role in major antitrust cases. Some 600 comments concerning the settlement were filed with his court. Extensive oral arguments were heard. In exercising the powers Congress gave the Federal courts to identify and protect the public interest, Judge Greene went beyond the arguments of lawyers and took into account other factors, including the clear will of Congress on some important issues.

The result of Judge Greene's Herculian efforts: A settlement that strikes a judicious balance of antitrust remedy and larger public interest concerns.

Mr. President, I am particularly heartened by one of the changes found necessary by Judge Greene and accepted by the parties. It addresses an issue I have cared about deeply for a long time. Furthermore, it ratifies action taken by the Senate last October—courageous action that was taken by this body in a highly charged political atmosphere. That issue, Mr. President, is whether A.T. & T. should be prohibited from the provision of electronic information publishing services so long as it possesses monopoly power in the provision of the transmission facilities upon which electronic publishing services are dependent.

Advances in telecommunications technologies are making possible the rapid development of this important new medium of mass communication. Electronic publishing services will provide Americans at home and at work with access to vast amounts of computer-stored news and information which can be called up on demand on home terminals and specially adapted television screens. For the immediate future the key link between these repositories of information and the public they serve will be the telephone lines.

I have long believed that first amendment principles require that this new medium of electronic publishing, which is now in the developmental stage, should be characterized by the same competition and diversity that characterizes our other information sources. And, I have long believed that such competition and such diversity would not develop if an unregulated A.T. & T. were allowed to enter this fledgling industry when it controlled access to the conduit through which electronic information must flow.

This issue was squarely before the Senate last year in S. 898, the Telecommunications Competition and Deregulation Act of 1981. My colleague from Kentucky, Senator FORD, and I perfected an amendment in committee which we believe established the proper public policy on this issue. In order to allow electronic publishing to develop into a viable and competitive medium, A.T. & T. was prohibited from electronically publishing information over its monopoly facilities. This amendment had the unanimous support of the Commerce Committee, and S. 898 passed the Senate overwhelmingly. Essentially the same policy was contained in House legislation this year where again there was broad, bipartisan support for the policy we established.

Part of that policy was reflected in the initial antitrust settlement proposal offered last January by A.T. & T. and the Department of Justice. Under that proposal, the divested local telephone companies would be prohibited from becoming electronic publishers over their monopoly telephone lines. Last week, Judge Greene found this arrangement to be in the public interest.

However, another aspect of the settlement proposal concerned me. A.T. & T., which will retain a virtual monopoly over all intercity lines, would have been freed to become an electronic publisher over those lines. But, Judge Greene, noting the clear will of Congress and the comments of many parties, found this unacceptable. Allow me to quote from his opinion.

Electronic publishing, which is still in its infancy, holds promise to become an important provider of information—such as news, entertainment, and advertising—in competition with the traditional print, television, and radio media; indeed, it has the potential, in time, for actually replacing some of these methods of disseminating information.

Traditionally, the Bell system has simply distributed information provided by others; it has not been involved in the business of generating its own information. The proposed decree would, for the first time, allow A.T. & T. to do both, and it would do so at a time when the electronic publishing industry is still in a fragile state of experimentation and growth and when electronic information can still most efficiently and most economically be distributed over A.T. & T.'s long distance network. If, under these circumstances, A.T. & T. were permitted to engage both in the transmission and the generation of information, there would be a substantial risk not only that it would stifle the efforts of other electronic publishers but that it would acquire a substantial monopoly over the generation of news in a more general sense. Such a development would strike at a principle which lies at the heart of the First Amendment: that the American people are entitled to a diversity of sources of information. In order to prevent this from occurring the Court will require, as a condition of its approval of the proposed decree, that it be modified to preclude A.T. & T. from entering the field of electronic publishing until the risk of its domination of that field has abated.

Mr. President, I commend Judge Greene on his insight and judicial fortitude in requiring this modification.

In summary, Mr. President, were it not for the procedures and powers given the Federal court by Congress in the Tunney Act, and the direction given by this body in the area of electronic publishing, this decision might not have been reached. But because of these actions, Judge Greene has been able to craft a decision which protects more than the parochial interests of the two litigants involved. Judge Greene has charted a wise course for the future of a dynamic industry. A.T. & T. and the Justice Department have been exemplary in their cooperation with the court throughout this suit, and have agreed to the imposed modifications. The American people can take pride in their Congress, pride in their court, and pride in the conduct of their fellow citizens, who fought this battle with a loyalty to the American system of justice that was nothing short of noble. Our country—its economy, its constitutional system, its people—will be the beneficiary of this historic case.

SENATE APPROVED CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 2248

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on Tuesday, the Senate approved the conference report on S. 2248, the Department of Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1983, I supported this conference report because I concluded that the report's benefits outweighed its deficiencies. For the record, I will take this opportunity to touch upon what I consider some of those benefits and deficiencies to be.

I was extremely pleased that the conferees, in their wisdom, saw fit to defer—for at least 1 year—the U.S. production of binary chemical weapons. I have voted on numerous occasions against the resumption of production of such weapons by all nations. I believe that our Government's emphasis should be on diplomatic efforts to prevent the manufacture and use of chemical and biological weapons. I do not accept the contention that such negotiations will only yield fruit if the United States races ahead and stockpiles more and more of these destabilizing tools of destruction. Though the debate on this subject clearly is not over, I applaud the conference for having deferred production for 1 more year.

The conference decision to retain the Inspector General provision added to the bill by the Senate is also noteworthy. Members of the House and Senate Armed Services Committees in the past have opposed efforts to establish an Inspector General's Office at the Pentagon. This year, the conference agreed that it will be beneficial to have, within the Department of Defense, an office the primary purpose of which will be to identify mismanagement, abuse, fraud, and waste, and to insist that actions be taken to remedy these problems when identified. It is clear there is no Government department which needs an Inspector General's Office more than the Department of Defense.

The conference acted responsibly when it decided to retain the provision in S. 2248 which authorizes for appropriations two nuclear aircraft carriers. These highly capable vessels are urgently required if our country's Naval strength is to be maintained at the level necessitated by our international reponsibilities and commitments.

Furthermore, I agree fully with the conferees' decision to insure that the National Guard and Reserve Forces receive the funds they require to replace aging equipment now in their inventories. The conference recommended a $200 million authorization for the Guard and Reserve Forces. We often forget the very important role played by the Guard and Reserve in the overall national defense effort. Currently, 33 percent of the Army's combat division strength is provided by the Army National Guard, and over 25 percent of the Air Force's fighter fleet is provided by the Air National Guard. The conference report acknowledges how vital these components are to our security.

Mr. President, recently, I shared with my colleagues my views on the issue of equity for former spouses. Although the full Senate never had the opportunity to debate this issue, many Members had expressed at various times the view that Federal law should permit the direct payment of retirement benefits to former spouses of members of the military. The conference report addresses this subject, and makes such payments possible as long as specific conditions prevail. The conference decision on this issue will permit service Secretaries to abide by the decrees of States courts relative to the distribution of military retirement benefits in divorce proceedings.

Lastly, Mr. President, the conference saw fit to cut from S. 2248 $100 million for civil defense crisis relocation. I have learned a great deal about this effort in recent months and am convinced that we are moving ahead much too quickly in this area. More thinking needs to be done and frankly, I believe we need to determine just how this relocation planning affects our strategic policy and the theory of deterrence on which this policy ostensibly is based.

Let me now turn to two of the major deficiencies of the bill covered by the conference report.

The Senate-passed bill struck the President's request for $1.5 billion to pay for the purchase of nine MX missiles. The conference decided not to adopt the Senate provision but instead to authorize $830 million for the purchase of five MX missiles. I continue to question the logic of financing the procurement of missiles the basing mode for which remains undecided.

The conference report also contains some $400 million for the B–1 bomber, which will most certainly be overcome by the technology of the Soviet Union in the early 1990's. The B–1 is a waste of money, and the funds intended for the B–1 program in my view should be devoted to an accelerated program for production of a more capable, longer lasting Stealth bomber

Mr. President, fortunately the conference report bill is an authorization for appropriations, and does not provide budget authority which will be forthcoming later in an appropriations measure. I am hopeful that some of the deficiencies regarding MX, the B–1, and other weapons systems of questionable value, can be corrected when the Department of Defense appropriations bill comes before us

Thank you, Mr. President.

"Whereas on October fifth, nineteen hundred eighty-one, with the signing of Public Law 97-54, the President of the United States, the Honorable Ronald W. Reagan, proclaimed Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of the United States and endorsed the call that the United States government take all steps necessary to secure from the Soviet Union the whereabouts of Raoul Wallenberg and to secure his return to freedom; and

"Whereas the United States government has pressed this effort on behalf of Raoul Wallenberg on both a bilateral basis and at international forums, such as the United Nations Human Rights Commission in which the Soviet Union has been urged to make a humanitarian gesture, which may lay questions to rest; or else, in the best of all possible outcomes, result in the discovery of the whereabouts of a man who stands among the heroes of our time; and

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION No. 78

"Whereas doctors and hospitals in California have in the past treated children from Mexico not covered by Medi-Cal or other health insurance; and

"Whereas hospitals have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in uncollected fees to indigent Mexican patients; and

"Whereas rising medical costs, diminishing funds, and lack of space are putting greater limits on the amount of health care for children that can be given to nonpaying Mexican citizens in California hospitals and clinics, which could result in Mexican children being unable to obtain necessary care which cannot be obtained in Mexico; and

"Whereas some of the services being provided to children in California facilities could be done effectively in Mexican facilities; and

"Whereas this is an international problem which reaches to all levels of government, and involves the health, and the lives of children; and

"Whereas the health care of children is an area which is of concern to both Mexico and the United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully memorializes the President and Congress of the United States to initiate discussions on the issue of border health care for children with the government of mexico for the purpose of establishing a child health care coordination policy agreement between the United States and Mexico; and be it further

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. WARNER:

S. 2869. A bill to modify the navigation project for Lynnhaven Inlet, Bay, and connecting waters, Virginia; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

MODIFICATION OF LONG CREEK CANAL PROJECT

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation to modify the Long Creek Canal Project in Virgina Beach, Va. The purpose of the legislation is to authorize the Secretary of the Army to reimburse the city of Virginia Beach $1.63 million for remedial work done on the Long Creek Canal project. The city was required to carry out the work as a result of a Federal navigation project performed by the Army Corps of Engineers in 1965.

The Corps of Engineers acknowledges its responsibility in creating the need for this remedial work. Since 1977, the city of Virginia Beach has tried unsuccessfully to obtain these funds. In my judgment, the city is clearly entitled to Federal reimbursement of the city funds expended.

I hope my colleagues will join me in support of this legislation.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. HEINZ):

S. 2871. A bill to provide that the moratorium on fringe benefit taxation (Public Law 95-427) applies to the value of certain campus housing furnished by educational institutions to their employees; to the Committee on Finance.

TAXATION OF CERTAIN CAMPUS HOUSING

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today is of immediate concern to four New England colleges: Amherst, Wesleyan, Smith, and Wellesley. It is also of interest to other institutions.

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) joins me as a cosponsor.

Wesleyan owns a number of houses and apartment buildings just off campus. The university purchased these to provide room for possible future expansion and to create a buffer zone around the campus. The dwellings are rented at cost to faculty members. They are unfurnished. The university pays the utility bills and has the snow shoveled in the winter, but offers no other services. It says its rental program is aimed at keeping faculty members near campus so that they have more contact with students. The rent is set so that the university recovers its costs. Wesleyan is not out to make a profit.

On December 8, 1981, the Internal Revenue Service issued a "technical advice memorandum" which states that the difference between the rent Wesleyan charges and the market rent it could collect is income to the faculty who live in the houses. Thus, Wesleyan should be withholding taxes based on that income. It also owes extra social security taxes. The ruling is retroactive. Wesleyan has been ordered to pay up for the last 3 years. The IRS cannot reach farther back than 3 years because of the statute of limitations.

Amherst, Smith, and Wellesley are in the same position.

In 1975, the IRS issued a discussion draft of regulations it was planning to publish on fringe benefits. The draft set off a furor. Members of Congress were deluged with mail from airline employees, who were upset about possibly having to pay taxes on their discounts on airline tickets, and from college professors who did not want to be taxed on tuition remissions that colleges offer children of university faculty. The IRS discussion draft was quickly withdrawn.

In 1978, Congress imposed a moratorium on fringe benefit regulations. The moratorium has been extended twice. The last time was in the 1981 tax bill. It expires at the end of 1983. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation:

Although the [moratorium] relates only to the issuance of regulations, it is the intent of the Congress that the [IRS] will not in any significant way alter, or deviate from, the historical treatment of traditional fringe benefits through the issuance of revenue rulings or revenue procedures, etc.

The IRS insists that this moratorium does not affect its decisions in the Wesleyan and other cases. That is because those decisions do not change the historical treatment of faculty housing. The colleges say that is not so.

My bill makes clear the moratorium applies to housing that is on or near campus and that is supplied at cost to the faculty members who occupy it. I am not asking the Senate to settle the underlying controversy over whether the rental discounts on the housing are income. Rather, this fringe benefit issue ought to be settled at the same time as the other fringe benefit issues. The bill also requires that any decisions on faculty housing be applied prospectively.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD, along with the text of another bill on a similar subject.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2871

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1 of the Act entitled "An Act of prohibit the issuance of regulations on the taxation of fringe benefits, and for other purposes," approved October 7, 1978 (Public Law 95-427), as amended by Public Law 96-167 and Public Law 97-34, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) APPLICATION OF SECTION TO THE VALUE OF CERTAIN FACULTY HOUSING.—This section shall be construed to preclude the assessment, for taxable years or periods beginning prior to January 1, 1984, of Federal employment taxes (imposed by subtitle C) or Federal income taxes with respect to the value of lodging furnished by or on behalf of an educational institution described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) to an employee (or his spouse or any of his dependents) of such institution if—

"(i) the lodging is located on a campus of, or in the proximity of, such institution, and

"(ii) such institution had a reasonable basis for not treating the value of lodging described in paragraph (i) as subject to such taxes.

For purposes of paragraph (ii), an educational institution shall be treated as having a reasonable basis for not treating the value of such lodging as subject to such taxes if such institution charged a reasonable rental amount for such lodging (even if such reasonable rental amount is less than the fair rental value of such lodging), taking into account such factors as the necessary direct costs of such institution in furnishing the lodging, the value of the lodging to the employee to whom the lodging is furnished, and any educational purposes of the institution in furnishing such lodging."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(a) Section 119 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to meals or lodging furnished for the convenience of the employer) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) LODGING FURNISHED BY CERTAIN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS TO EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be excluded from the gross income of an employee of an educational institution described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) the value of lodging—

"(A) located on a campus of, or in the proximity of, such institution, and

"(B) furnished to the employee, his spouse, or any of his dependents by or on behalf of such institution.

"(2) RENT MUST NOT BE LESS THAN DIRECT COST OF LODGING.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to the value of any lodging to the extent that the direct cost of such lodging to the educational institution exceeds amounts paid by the employee for the use of such lodging.

"(3) EMPLOYEES RESIDING IN UNIVERSITY HOUSING MUST NOT RECEIVE REDUCED COMPENSATION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to employees of an educational institution whose compensation is reduced because of their residence in lodging furnished by such institution."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1981.

(c)(1) For purposes of the employment taxes, subsection (d) of section 119 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (other than paragraph (2) thereof), as added by this Act, shall apply to all open taxable years beginning before January 1, 1982, if the educational institution had a reasonable basis for not treating the value of lodging described in paragraph (1) of such subsection as being subject to such taxes.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), an educational institution shall in any case be treated as having a reasonable basis for not treating the value of lodging as subject to the employment taxes if the educational institution charged a reasonable rental amount for such lodging, taking into account such factors as—

(A) the necessary direct costs of such institution in furnishing the lodging,

(B) the value of the lodging to the employees to whom the lodging is furnished, and

(C) the institution's educational purposes in furnishing such lodging.

The reasonableness of the rental amount shall not be affected by the fact that the fair rental value of the lodging may have exceeded the rental amount.

(3) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) the term "open taxable year" means any taxable year for which the assessment of a deficiency, or the allowance of any credit or refund, with respect to the employment tax involved is not barred by any law or rule of law, and

(B) the term "employment taxes" means the taxes imposed by subtitle C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.●

By Mr. MATHIAS:

S. 2873. A bill to amend the National Housing Act to provide for a mortgage and loan interest reduction program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

MORTGAGE AND LOAN INTEREST REDUCTION PROGRAM

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I am introducing today legislation to aid first-time home buyers in acquiring a home that they can afford.

The Home Buyers' Assistance Act seeks to reduce the cost of high mortgage interest rates by deferring part of the cost to later years as the homeowner's income increases or upon resale or refinancing of the home.

The vehicle I have chosen to do this is a below-market interest rate section 203 program. Section 203 is the basic FHA-insured conventinal 30-year mortgage. It has proven over the years to be a workable program for financing home purchases for many Americans. But even this program, in today's high mortgage interest rate environment, carries a 15-percent interest rate. Such a high rate of interest is simply intolerable for the vast majority of home buyers. So I have structured a mortgage interest reduction program to reduce that interest rate to a more affordable level.

My bill provides for the interest rate to be "brought down" by HUD through the Government National Mortgage Association to as low as 7 percent, depending on the home buyer's income and ability to pay. The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development would have the discretion to determine how deep the interest reduction should be within certain parameters spelled out in the bill.

First of all, the maximum annual household income would be limited to $30,000. That income limit could be increased to $37,000 where the HUD Secretary determines that a higher cost market exists.

The interest rate reduction payments would accumulate as a second lien against the property for up to 12 years or upon resale or refinancing of the property, whichever occurs first.

The home buyer would repay this second lien in gradually increasing payments which would increase by at least 5 percent each year. The home buyer's payment would be adjusted annually based on the home buyer's income and ability to pay. The monthly principal, interest, and mortgage insurance would, at all times, have to equal at least 25 percent of the home buyer's monthly income. So this bill is a self-financing one where the home buyer ultimately repays the interest reduction payments to the Federal Government. The ultimate cost to the Government of this home financing proposal is zero.

The interest rate reduction payments would accumulate as a second lien for up to 12 years repayable by the homeowner as I have just described.

Both the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) and the Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac) are authorized to purchase these section 203 BMIR mortgages from Ginnie Mae. The bill requires an annual report to the Congress by the HUD Secretary on the number of households assisted, their income ranges, acceptability of the mortgages by the secondary market, and the general impact of the program on the housing market.

In order to insure sufficient equity in the home, the bill provides for a minimum down payment of 5 percent which may be increased in the discretion of the Secretary.

The initial capitalization for this program is the bill's $5 billion authorization over the next 5 years. This is a number my colleagues on the Banking Committee unanimously approved in May as a reasonable program level for a modest housing stimulus, crafted by the distinguished chairman of the Housing Subcommittee, Senator LUGAR. And I would note that the revised second concurrent budget resolution passed by the Congress anticipated at $3 billion program of this nature.

So the Congress is on record having recognized the severe housing crisis in which this Nation finds itself and having budgeted a sum to address this problem. All that is lacking is a program to obligate those funds in an expeditious manner. My bill would do this.

In structuring this bill, I have tried to avoid setting up new mechanisms or Government machinery and I have left as much discretion as possible with the HUD Secretary and the FHA underwriters in administering this program.

People know what the 203 program is. Buyers, sellers, builders, realtors, and mortgage finance institutions are familiar with what is commonly called the FHA program. So I have chosen to build on this tried and proven program which has been so successful in housing so many Americans over the years.

The bill does not specify the housing type which may be purchased, leaving that choice to the home buyers. The section 203 program is available to finance the purchase of both new and existing homes, in condominium form or fee simple. It is also available for townhouses, owner apartments, and mobile homes.

So a broad range of housing types and ownership forms are possible under my bill. It provides for freedom of choice in the marketplace by the consumer.

The American dream of a home of one's own has become more and more elusive for those who do not already own one.

The U.S. League of Savings Associations, in its publication Homeownership: The American Dream Adrift, reports that of all the 1981 home buyers, 13.5 percent were first-time purchasers, compared to 36 percent first-timers in 1977. The median purchase price paid by those first-time home buyers was $58,900. And more and more of them were buying condominiums—25.6 percent of all first-time purchases in 1981. Fifty-three percent of them made less than a 20-percent downpayment, while their median monthly housing expense (mortgage, taxes, insurance, utilities) totaled $721.

And shelter costs were eating up more and more of the first-time home buyer's income. In 1981, almost half (47 percent) of all first-time home buyers spent more than one-fourth of their household income on housing expenses.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statistical profile table on repurchasers and first-time home buyers appear at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, even more disturbing is the shrinking percentage of home buyers able to afford a newly constructed home. The National Association of Homebuilders reports that only 11.2 percent of all families could afford the median-priced $70,000 new home in 1981, assuming they limited their housing expenses to one-fourth of their income. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an NAHB table titled "Income and Expenses Needed to Purchase a New Single Family Home 1973-1981" appear at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, I would hope our Nation's homebuilders could take advantage of this bill's home financing technique for their unsold inventory and for additional new homes which they might bring to market within the affordability range of the first-time home buyer.

The national statistical profile of the first-time home buyer shows he or she is between the ages of 24 and 34 with a median household income of $34,000. More and more of these home buyers are single and, therefore, have less than the median income I have just cited which more often reflects the income of a two-earner household. Furthermore, their income is relatively high because so few first-time buyers can afford to buy in today's market.

To demonstrate what the $30,000 income home buyer can afford in today's market I ask that a table prepared by the Congressional Research Service appear at the conclusion of my remarks.

As one can readily see, the point at which a home buyer with a $30,000 income can afford the median-priced home cited by the National Association of Homebuilders is at a 13-percent interest rate, 2 points below the current FHA rate, assuming they have the cash for a 20-percent downpayment. The National Association of Realtors tells me that, in order to buy down the current FHA rate to 12 percent, it would cost $1,800 per mortgage per year or $16,273 for the 12-year life of the second lien, taking into account the minimum 5-percent annual increase in homeowner payments. At year 12, however, the home would have appreciated in value and with resale or refinancing at that time, the second lien could be repaid leaving a balance in net equity for the homeowner.

Mr. President, this program promises immediate relief from the burden of high mortgage interest rates for not only the home buyer, but for others in the real estate chain including existing home sellers, new homebuilders, realtors, and mortgage finance institutions. These are extraordinary times for the housing sector of our Nation requiring extraordinary measures.

My Home Buyers Assistance Act promises such extraordinary help using existing, workable mortgage programs at modest initial outlays. I must emphasize again, however, that all of the initial Federal outlays are recaptured over time or upon resale or refinancing. It is a minimal price to pay to open the door of the American home to so many families.

I urge speedy consideration of this measure by my colleagues on the Banking Committee.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. MURKOWSKI (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 2875. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to enter into long term contracts for the lease of a limited number of housing units at or near not more than five Air Force installations for the purpose of providing badly needed family housing for Air Force personnel, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

THE AIR FORCE FAMILY HOUSING BUILD-LEASE ACT OF 1982

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I am introducing, along with Senator STEVENS, legislation to permit the Air Force to undertake a new military housing pilot program in several locations around the country.

In recent years, military construction budgets have been slashed in an attempt to reduce short-term outlays. Serious family housing shortages have occurred as a result in several locations around the nation.

At Eielson Air Force Base near Fairbanks, Alaska, a critical housing need is resulting in lower morale and higher turnover than would otherwise be the case. At Eielson there will be 2150 families requiring housing by the end of 1982, but there are only 1247 housing units on base. We expect that 258 out of the 903 families unable to acquire on-base housing will also be unable to find housing in the Fairbanks area due to the low availability of housing locally.

As a result of this housing shortage, the Air Force must deny 62 percent of the requests of newly assigned personnel desiring to bring their families with them to Eielson. The average waiting time for on base housing is 4 months, but some eligible personnel have waited over 6 months—and the problem is getting worse. As you would expect, lower morale, lower retention, lower on-the-job performance, and higher turnover all take a toll on mission capability.

Mr. President, the Alaskan Air Command has made requests for new housing through Air Force channels. If the Air Force passes the request along to Congress in their regular budget submittal next year, and if Congress approves that request, we may see 100 new housing units built in Eielson in fiscal year 1984 followed by 100 new units in fiscal year 1986. However, the problem exists today and it will literally take years to correct using the conventional military construction program.

I believe there is a need for a new approach to respond to these situations with greater speed and flexibility than is possible under the existing military construction budgeting process. Today, I do not propose to replace that process, but I suggest we take a look at a new approach to complement that process. In two of the locations where the housing situation is critical—Fairbanks, Alaska, and Abeline, Tex.—concerned citizens have gotten together with base commanders to work out an alternative means of constructing family housing. The legislation I am introducing today embodies the fruits of their labor.

The Alaskan proposal—Operation Cool Hope—and the Texas proposal—Operation Ad Hope—envision private developers building housing to military specifications on land leased to them on the base. The developers would then lease the housing back to the Air Force. After a specified number of years the housing would revert back to the Air Force as would the land on which the housing was built. Instead of a single, "up front" construction expenditure, the Federal Government would spread its expenditures for leasing out several years.

Similar leasing arrangements are in successful use by the military in overseas installations. Current law allows the Air Force to enter into 10-year leasing arrangements overseas. My bill gives authority for the Air Force to undertake a limited pilot program where 30-year leases could be entered into. Under this program, the Air Force would pay no more than $1,000 per month per unit in "shelter rent" during the first year of the contract. "Shelter rent" is compensation to the developers for the fixed cost of the project, and does not include utilities and maintenance. This legislation also contains provisions to allow existing private housing to be provided in lieu of building new housing if it exists, and there is a provision requiring the Air Force to submit a report of the facts concerning a proposed contract to the House and Senate Armed Services Committees prior to the signing of the contract.

This approach is attractive to me for several reasons. First, it encourages the involvement of local communities in the development of a mutually beneficial working relationship with the Federal Government. This type of relationship exemplifies "New Federalism" at its best. Second, this program can be used to lower short-term construction outlays while providing badly needed family housing that would otherwise not be built for several years down the line. We already use multiyear arrangements for military procurement and entitlements—but unlike those areas where future Federal indebtedness cannot always be accurately projected, Federal indebtedness accruing from those construction contracts would be predictable on even fixed amounts. In a leasing contract like the ones which would be entered into using this approach, we know in advance what our future outlays will be. Clearly, the same cannot be said about procurement contracts or military retirement benefits. Finally, Mr. President, it has been frustrating for me to be made aware of housing situations that exist at Air Force Bases such as Eielson only to learn that the problem will take years to correct using the conventional military construction program. The Milcon program is a valuable, prudent manner to handle routine construction at our military bases around the world. However, it is clear that there is a need for a secondary, flexible approach to take care of urgent needs. I believe this legislation lays the groundwork for a pilot program to give us the experience and the data to determine whether to make this method of financing widely available for the construction of military housing.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill appear following these remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was orderd to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2875

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the Air Force Family Housing Build-Lease Act of 1982.

SEC. 2. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Air Force may enter into contracts for the lease of housing facilities, existing or to be constructed, at or near Air Force installations in the United States for assignment of such facilities, without rental charge, as public quarters to members of the Armed Forces, including enlisted members in the grade of E-4 and below. Such contracts may be made through negotiation.

(b)(1) A contract for leases of housing facilities uNot more than 300 housing units may be leased under this Act at any one location.

(c) Expenditures for the rental of housing facilities under a contract under this Act (exclusive of any costs for utilities, maintenance, and operation) may not exceed $1,000 per month for any unit for the first year of the contract.

(d) A contract may not be made under this Act until (1) the Secretary of the Air Force submits to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a written report of the facts concerning the proposed contract, and (2) a period of 21 days elapses after the report is received by the committees.●

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague from Alaska in cosponsoring legislation authorizing the Air Force to enter into contracts for the long-term lease of privately built housing on or near Air Force bases.

The initiation of this type of program comes at an opportune time. We are in the process of rebuilding and restructuring our defenses. This process is causing problems at some military installations where the demand for housing is outstripping the supply. The shortage places burdens on the families of our military personnel. Families are being delayed in joining the service member at their new duty stations because suitable and affordable housing is not available. This causes morale problems which hurts the performance of the individuals involved. That in turn adversely impacts on the readiness of our armed services. It also hurts the rate of retention which has been improving lately—particularly among the skilled career personnel with families who are considering whether to remain in the service. It would be unfortunate if we lost some of these people because the shortage of decent affordable housing separates them from their families for unacceptably long periods of time.

Mr. President, my colleague from Alaska and I have a particular interest in seeing this type of pilot program tried. There is a serious shortage of family housing at Eielson Air Force Base near Fairbanks. It will be several years before adequate Government housing can be built. Not only is there a shortage of military housing, but there is a shortage of civilian housing as well. This places strains on the whole community which obviously impacts on the service members and their families.

If this pilot project works—and I think it will—then these people's housing needs can be met without having to wait for regularly constructed military housing to be authorized, funded and constructed.

We should keep in mind that this is a pilot project. By making it a pilot project we will be able to test out the concept and make changes before applying it to the entire Department of Defense. At the same time, we can alleviate serious housing shortages facing Air Force families at several Air Force bases.

By Mr. NUNN (for himself, Mr. TSONGAS, and Mr. BURDICK):

S. 2876. A bill to amend the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 to provide debentures for State development companies; to the Committee on Small Business.

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION STATE DEVELOPMENT COMPANY PROGRAM AMENDMENTS OF 1982

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, along with Senators TSONGAS and BURDICK, I am pleased to introduce the Small Business Administration State Development Company Program Amendments of 1982. The purpose of this legislation is to insure the continued Federal/State/private sector partnership that has existed through the Small Business Administration's State Development Company, or so-called 501 program, as a source of reasonable financing for small business.

This program is an integral part of the congressional policy to assist the small business community in meeting its financing needs by establishing a program to stimulate the flow of private equity capital and long-term loans to the business.

Under current Federal law, and pursuant to the laws of individual jurisdictions, a State economic development authority, or business development corporation, may be formed. The Small Business Administration is given explicit statutory authority to make long-term direct loans to these State business development companies. The proceeds of loans made to these companies may be used by these companies only to provide equity capital or long-term loans to small businesses. These companies typically derive their private capital by borrowing funds from financial institutions. They may then borrow directly from the Small Business Administration, up to the amount of its non-Federal capital.

In 1981, there were 24 State development corporations, although 16 States are most active. Nationwide, a total of 191 loans have been approved by the BDC's in 1981, with over $31 million being disbursed to the small business community. As an illustration of the Federal/State/private sector partnership in this program, bank financings to small businesses made in conjunction with "501" company loans totaled over $71 million. Almost one-half of these firms were in manufacturing. In addition, the program has cumulatively made almost 750 loans to small businesses, for a total loan volume of almost $106 million. Georgia has had a very active State development company program for several years.

Furthermore, to the best of my knowledge, there has never been a loss by the U.S. Small Business Administration on any loan to any State business development company, nor has the agency, or the Congress, found any significant programmatic problems.

Despite the apparent success of the program, one area where there is a potential problem is in the ability of the Federal Government to remain as an active partner in this program. As I indicated earlier, the current statute limits the Small Business Administration's participation with the State development companies to direct Government loans only. With the necessary budget reductions taking place, and the Small Business Administration's direct loans being the first area to be significantly reduced, it is imperative that the "501" program have an alternative funding vehicle.

This legislation will provide that alternative. Simply the bill provides that, in addition to the direct loan route which the Small Business Administration may use to participate in the "501" program, the SBA will be able to purchase or guarantee debentures issued by the State development company. This authority to purchase or guarantee debentures is similar to the existing authority that SBA has in its SBIC program, and in the "503" Certified Development Company program.

Furthermore, to insure that no additional budgetary requirements would be necessary to accommodate this "501" program change, the legislation provides that debentures issued under the "501" program shall be taken from the total authority already made available by Congress for debentures for the "503" Certified Development Company program.

Mr. President, to insure that there is no misconception about the regulatory authority which this legislation gives to the Small Business Administration, I want to clarify two points. First, there is nothing in this legislation that changes either the current relationship between SBA and the "501" companies, or between the "501" companies and their portfolio investments. The bill merely provides an alternative funding mechanism. Second, the legislation provides authority to the SBA to determine an overall regulatory scheme for deciding general appropriate uses of funds by the BDC's derived from the purchase or guarantee of the debentures. But this authority does not mean that the agency is given any authority to "approve" any specific investment, or individual use of proceeds. Currently, the agency's regulations (13 CFR 108.501-1(e)) establish a scheme for the permissible use of "501" direct loan proceeds. This authority is being extended only to permit the agency to provide the same guidance for use of proceeds derived from debenture purchases or guarantees.

Mr. President, this legislation has been endorsed by the Business Development Corp. of Georgia, and the National Association of business Development Corps. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2876

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Small Business Administration State Development Company Program Amendments of 1982".

SEC. 2. Section 501 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 is amended—

(1) by inserting in the first sentence of subsection (a), after the phrase "make loans to" the phrase ", or to purchase or guarantee debentures issued by,";

(3) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following: "Any purchases or guarantees of debentures made under this section shall be subject to the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, but shall be made without regard to the use and investment by the development company of funds secured by it from other sources."; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(c)(1) The Administration may purchase, or guarantee the timely payment of all principal and interest scheduled on, any debenture issued by any qualified State development company.

"(2) Such purchases or guarantees may be made by the Administration on such terms and conditions as the Administration may by regulation determine to be appropriate. The Administration may impose an additional charge for administrative expenses with respect to each debenture purchases or guaranteed under this section.

"(3) The full faith and credit of the United States is pledged to the payment of all amounts which may be required to be paid under any guarantee under this section.

SEC. 3. (a) Section 20(n)(2) of the Small Business Act is amended by striking "section 503" each time it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 501 and 503".

(b) Section 20(q)(2) of the Small Business Act is amended by striking "section 503" each time it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "section 501 and 503".●

● Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator NUNN as a sponsor of this legislation. It is critical to the continued activities of State development corporations, which make an important contribution to the growth of our small business sector.

Last year, State development companies across the country disbursed over $31 million in loan money to firms employing more than 400,000 people. In North Dakota, this program has succeeded in creating or preserving jobs which might otherwise not exist. In fact, I am very proud to not that the North Dakota State Development Credit Corp.—NDSDCC—was recognized at the recent national convention of State development corporations as the most improved business corporation in the United States for 1981–82. Under the able leadership of its executive vice-president, W. C. Smith, the NDSDCC is helping farm equipment manufacturers, implement dealers, and other small businessmen to get on their feet and prosper in today's very competitive economy.

This bill will allow State development corporations to issue debentures guaranteed by the Small Business Administration, which in turn can be sold to private buyers or the Federal Financing Bank. With the likely curtailment of the SBA's direct loan program, this additional source of Federal funding is badly needed to supplement the financial backing that State development corporatons obtain from State banks and other investors. I appreciate the work done by my distinguished colleague from Georgia in putting this bill together, and I hope it will receive prompt consideration by the Small Business Committee, and the Congress.●

By Mr. HATFIELD (for himself, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. CHILES, and Mr. HEFLIN):

S. 2877. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an additional exclusion of interest and dividends for individuals 65 and over; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

ADDITIONAL EXCLUSION OF INTERESTS AND DIVIDENDS

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, today Senators HUDDLESTON, HAWKINS, CHILES, HEFLIN and I are introducing legislation that exempts 50 percent of net interest and dividend income from taxation for individuals age 65 or over. The proposal has two limitations: First, the exclusion is limited to $2,500 in interest for single and head of household returns—$5,000 in interest for joint return—and second, is available only to those who have an adjusted gross income (AGI) less than $15,000 for single returns ($17,500) for joint returns.

The partial exemption of interest income of persons over the age of 65 will benefit more than 93 percent of all people over age 65 who paid Federal income taxes. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that 1 million elderly taxpayes would be relieved from having to pay any Federal income taxes. About 4 out of the total 7 million elderly returns would receive an average reduction of $215.

In the 96th Congress a $200/$400 interest exclusion was enacted in order to encourage saving and in 1981 the Congress enacted the all-savers certificate and new retirement incentives that furthered the capital formation goals of the Congress. the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 also enacted a 15 percent net interest exclusion that will begin in 1985 but is subject to a ceiling of $3,000 per person—$6,000 on a joint return. Unfortunately, ERTA also repealed the $200/$400 interest exclusion and in effect, leaves us without an effective incentive for the small saver. This mistake, unfortunately, will especially affect the fixed income elderly who earn interest income on savings accounts.

In my visits across the State of Oregon I have noticed that the elderly are frustrated, disappointed and outraged at the Congress for its policies that affect the aging. Budget cuts in medicare, housing assistance, and food stamps, to name a few, when combined with pending tax proposals to raise the floor on medical deductions as well as impose withholding on interest and dividend income have created a perception that the aging are bearing a disproprotionate burden. Even the popular IRA incentives are viewed by some of my elderly constituents as unfairly biased against the retired citizen.

Mr. President, the elderly need a tax incentive that recognized the contribution of their savings to the economy. When we consider the fact that many of the elderly taxpayers put their money into taxable pass book accounts, the double digit inflation rates that we have recently experienced virtually assures that their savings accounts are losing their original value. For example, a $100 a month private pension when faced with a 10-percent inflation rate, would lease 50 percent of its value in just 12 years. Since the income of our retired citizens has been taxed once already, should we tax it again when interest is earned on their little nest egg?

The elderly in our society have saved a lifetime to get what they have. Their nest egg for retirement is quickly losing its value in these inflationary times. When the all-savers certificates expire, these elderly savers will be in worse shape than they were prior to enacting the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. Because the elimination of the $200/$400 exclusion provided a means for financing the all-savers certificates, we should reenact a targeted saving incentive for our elderly. Thus, the effective date of this bill corresponds to the expiration of the all-savers certificate.

Mr. President, in the past few years there have been dozens of savings bills introduced in the Congress. These bills have been based on three key assumptions that economists have made:

First, the savings rate is lower in the United States than in other industrial countries;

Second, the amount of savings is tied closely to changes in income; and

Third, saving is closely related to the life cycle—more saving is done in pre-retirement years while it is consumed after retirement.

According to a remarkable study conducted by Dr. F. Thomas Juster for the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan, these assumptions may be seriously flawed. In Dr. Juster's words,

> The principal reason for the fact that the U.S. has a very low national savings rate is not because those who are positive savers tend to save less than people in other countries, but rather because an unusually large proportion of the U.S. population dissaves every year (about one-third of the total 1972–1973).

In essence, by excessively utilizing credit we have diminished the amount of savings that is available to reindustrialize our economy and rebuild our infrastructure. Our current tax structure encourages this result by rewarding consumption and debt financing, but taxing harshly savings income.

The other surprise in the conclusions reached by Dr. Juster is the fact that those over the age of 65 do not seem to sharply reduce their savings. The data seems to indicate that the elderly save more than the average working adult. Moreover, Dr. Juster makes a strong argument that the existence of a pension plan or the availability of social security income at retirement actually intensifies the amount of saving for people reaching the retirement age.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these tables from Dr. Juster's study as well as an article written by Dr. Juster for the Economic Outlook be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAVING, ECONOMIC GROWTH, AND ECONOMIC POLICY

(By F. Thomas Juster, Director, Institute for Social Research, Professor of Economics, University of Michigan)

[Charts herein referred to not reproduced in the RECORD]

INTRODUCTION AND BACKGROUND

It is widely believed by economists, policymakers, and perhaps even the general public that a significant part of the current problem faced by the U.S. economy lies in a shortage of savings, a shortage which has lowered the rate of capital formation and is thus partly or mainly responsible for the poor productivity performance of the economy during recent years. The sources of that concern are easy to identify: personal saving rates in the U.S. have tended to be around the 6–7 percent zone for many years, while comparable estimates of personal saving rates in Western European countries and Japan tend to be at least twice and sometimes three times as high. The resulting differential in savings is seen as a principal reason for differential economic performance. That general perception has been made more visible during the last several years by U.S. saving rates which, as initially reported, were as low as 3 or 4 percent in contrast to the customary 6 or 7 percent, allegedly driven down by consumers' unwillingness to save in the face of high inflation rates.

At the same time as many have perceived a gap between actual U.S. saving rates and what would be desirable to restore economic vigor and competitiveness, concerns have also been voiced about the longer term consequences for saving and investment of the predictable aging of the U.S. population. The issue here has little or nothing to do with inflation. Rather, it concerns the widely believed proposition that saving has a "life-cycle" character to it, that older people are typically dissavers who spend more than they receive in current income, and that a rise in the proportion of older people would have a perceptible impact on the total flow of saving available for productive investment.

These concerns have brought to the surface a number of issues, which the Reagan administration's economic policy proposals are designed to deal with. For example, the administration's proposal for tax reduction is clearly designed to have a significant impact on the rate of personal savings as well as on investment incentives. The attempt to pare down the rate of growth of the public sector and to reduce the deficit are in part designed to reduce the inflation rate, with the hope that it will have a positive impact on saving behavior. And finally, discussions about possible modification of the Social Security program to increase the retirement age are presumably designed not only with the object of maintaining solvency of the Social Security trust fund, but also with an eye to its possibly favorable impact on the saving behavior of the elderly population.

SAVING BEHAVIOR IN HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

Some of these concerns represent old problems that are being taken more seriously, others represent relatively new problems that have not been faced by previous administration, while still others represent the application of the new "supply-side" economics to analysis of saving behavior. But before any of them can be carefully examined or assessed, a few basic facts about saving behavior need to be understood.

In general terms, saving is the difference between disposable income and current outlays by consumers; alternatively, it is the difference between change in assets and change in liabilities—the change in net worth excluding changes due to capital gains or losses. If all the data were perfect and all the definitions were consistent, either income minus outlays or asset change minus liability change would come out with the same number. But that doesn't usually happen, and the discrepancy is sometimes pretty large. Given the difficulty of measuring asset levels accurately, to say nothing of measuring changes in asset holdings, most analyses of saving focus on the income less outlay definition.

The postwar trajectories of a number of series relevant to saving are shown below in Chart 1. The solid line in the lower panel shows the ratio of saving to disposable income as conventionally measured. The thick line in the upper panel shows the financial asset change component of saving, the dashed line shows the liability or debt change component, and the thin line shows an important component of debt—the change in housing mortgage debt.

What kind of story is shown by the data in Chart 1? First, a dominant characteristic of the saving/income ratio is that it appears to have no trend at all over the entire postwar period. Saving rates were relatively low during the late 1940s, as consumers were spending a relatively large fraction of income to replenish and replace stocks of durables depleted during World War II. During the 1950s saving rated were typically between 6 and 7 percent, averaging a little under 7, while during the 1960s saving rates averaged a bit lower, although they were usually between 6 and 7 percent than as well. And during the 1970s, saving rates actually averaged over 7 percent, although during the last several years they have been much lower.

An interesting perspective on the allegation that saving rates during the last few years of the 1970s were driven down to historically low levels by inflation-induced spending is provided by the fact that saving rates during that period were not much if any lower than they were during the early part of the 1960s—the halcyon days when inflation rates were in the one or two percent zone!

If data relating to a longer span of time had been plotted in Chart 1, they would show about the same story—not much evidence of any secular trend in saving behavior. The historical studies of Goldsmith, for example, which take saving back into the late nineteenth century, can be summarized by saying that there was no evidence of a secular trend in saving behavior all the way from the late 1800s to the 1920s and on to the late 1940s. Thus we have no persuasive evidence at all that saving rates have been significantly different, measured in a secular trend sense, for the last century.

The second thing Chart 1 tells us is that simple theories relating saving behavior to inflation rates—will not hold water. We have had four periods in the United States when inflation rates either reached high levels or accelerated dramatically: in 1950–51, we reached inflation rates of close to 6 percent after a couple of years when prices were roughly constant; in 1967–1970, inflation rates went up to the 6 percent level after a relatively long period of stability in the 1–2 percent range; in 1973–74, inflation rates went from the 3 percent range to as high as 12 percent; and in 1978–80 inflation rates went from a low of 5 percent to a high of over 13 percent. The corresponding behavior of saving rates during this period cannot be generalized: in 1950–51, rates of personal saving appeared to increase with inflation; in 1967–70, saving rates were high and erratic; in 1973–74, saving rates increased substantially; and in 1978–80, saving rates were low by historical standards, and lower than in the previous several years.

The third thing that Chart 1 shows is that movements in saving rates associated with economic expansions and contractions are much more easily identified in the debt change component of total savings than in the asset change component. Changes in debt are clearly a more volatile series than changes in assets, and the nature and direction of changes are easily predictable from knowledge of the peak and through dates of cyclical expansions and contractions. Thus, in a cyclical sense, most of the action in saving behavior shows up in terms of changes in debt, while in a secular trend sense, there doesn't appear to by any action at all.

Finally, the reader should note the big differences between total saving and the asset and debt change components. As an illustration, the saving-to-income ratio was 5.6 percent in 1977; but that figure resulted from the combination of an asset change-to-income ratio of roughly 18 percent and a debt change-to-income ratio of roughly 13 percent. Thus, while the U.S. saving rate is low by comparison with Western Europe or Japan, the reason is not that conventional saving (increases in savings or checking accounts, CDs, etc.) is that much lower, but that consumer debt changes are so much larger. The way to impact most effectively on total saving may well be to affect the debt component rather than the asset component.

WHAT DETERMINES SAVING BEHAVIOR?

There is an enormous professional literature on the determinants of saving. This is in part a consequence of the fact that we have a lot of data of various sorts that relate to consumption and saving behavior, and there are lots of fascinating puzzles in those data. For example, once Kuznets and Goldsmith discovered that the long-term saving/income ratio was trendless, that appeared at odds with the consistent finding that rich people seemed to save a higher proportion of their income than poor people. If rich people save more than poor ones, why didn't everybody save more when they all got richer? Various theories have been developed to explain this and other puzzles, but the two that attracted most attention were the permanent income hypothesis (attributable to Friedman) and the life cycle hypothesis (attributable to Modigliani, Ando, and Brumberg).

The two theories are really quite similar, and differ only in their subtleties. Both are based on standard assumptions of economic theory: that people live in a world characterized by perfect certainty and perfect foresight; that there are long-term income, consumption, labor supply, and bequest plans; that changes in family circumstances and in the general economy are foreseen and embedded in the plans; and that all consumers are busily making small adjustments in their consumption and saving behavior as new information and different circumstances occur over their lifetimes. The conventional theory has a static flavor—it assumes fixed expectations and goals and does not provide for much in the way of learning, adaptation, or other dynamic processes. To many people, including this writer, models of this sort are not very plausible representations of how people actually make consumption and saving decisions, given the uncertainties and vicissitudes of the real world.

Theory has a powerful influence on policy. For example, the widespread belief in the life cycle view of saving is the basis for the current debate about the implications of an aging population structure for the Social Security system. The idea is that younger people tend to save little or dissave because they are in the process of acquiring durable goods and are thus expanding debt of one kind or another, older people are using up the assets they have accumulated during their working lifetimes and are thus either saving little or dissaving, while middle-aged people whose children have grown and whose durable goods stocks are adequate for their needs are relieved from expenditure pressures, are looking toward retirement, and are saving at relatively high rates. As a rational way of acting in a perfectly certain world, that picture has a lot to recommend it. But does it accord with the way people actually behave?

Most of the evidence used to test saving theory is based on time-series analysis of aggregate data. For well-known technical reasons, all such attempts to estimate savings functions are unstable and, in my judgment, unpersuasive. One would like to find evidence, at the level of individual behavior, which either confirms or refutes the theory, especially one with such potent policy implications as suggesting that "we may need to revamp the Social Security system because of its negative impact on private saving.

Although good data on individual saving behavior are hard to come by, and most of them are subject to serious potential biases arising from measurement errors, it is instructive to look at the most recent data with an eye to its match with the life cycle theory. Chart 2, based on data from the 1971–73 Consumers Expenditure Survey, takes the 20,000-odd households covered by that survey, divides them into 20 groups based on income quintile and age, and then computes aggregate savings/income ratios for each of the 20 groups.

If the life cycle hypothesis is valid, we ought to find it reflected in the relationship of saving to age in any given income class. In general, saving ought to be lower in the under 45 and over 65 groups, higher in the other two groups, and highest in the 55–64 group where people are accumulating assets with the expectation of retiring. The data show no such patterns. In each income quintile, the saving rate rises monotonically with age. Not only do the elderly not dissave, they apparently don't even save less than the near elderly! As a generalization, these data are consistent with the behavioral view that saving gets to be a habit which people acquire with circumstances and then retain, even in the face of dramatic changes in life circumstances.

Similar patterns can be found for life cycle savings patterns in other countries, and for other cross-sectional data from the United States for earlier periods. For example, data on wealth holdings, which are scarce and also subject to significant measurement error problems, are also inconsistent with the life cycle view: if people dissaved when they retired, older people who die should have fewer assets than younger people who die, and that seems generally not to be the case.

CURRENT POLICY ISSUES: HOW CAN WE INCREASE SAVING?

Virtually everyone agrees that it would be good for the economy if saving rates were to increase. The implicit theory behind the proposals advanced by the administration, as reflected by the public comments of various economic spokesmen, is that the way to get saving up is to get the inflation rate down, provide a greater reward to savers, and legislate a tax cut with relatively favorable treatment of upper income groups who do most of the saving.

Before examining the likelihood that those effects will be observed, it might be well to remind ourselves that there is another view of the best way to increase saving, which might be called the conventional demand-side view. According to that theory, the way to increase saving is to initiate policies that have the effect of pushing up real income, and higher saving would follow along. If one attempted to push up saving without worrying about pushing up real income, the demand-side theory says that the saving would be dissipated—it wouldn't necessarily be matched by any demand for investment, and would simply take the form (temporarily) of investment in undesirably high inventories and (subsequently) of reduced rates of income growth, with the end result of actually reducing both saving and investment. That view has lots of problems with it, although it continues to retain a kernel of truth that ought not to be ignored.

But what about the "new" views of how to get the saving rate up? To begin with, there is absolutely no evidence that a cut in taxes will produce more than a temporary bulge in the saving rate. One can expect with some confidence that the bulk—perhaps three-quarters—of any tax cut would end up in saving during the quarter in which the tax cut was enacted. But one can expect with equal confidence that, over the next several years, the tax cut would result in the "normal" proportions of the increased income being spent and saved, with no permanent effect on saving rates. The absolute level of saving would of course be higher, simply because under the right conditions a tax cut would increase the level of real income. And if real income rose fast enough, there would be a longer though still temporary bulge in saving.

Secondly, there is little evidence that whether the taxes of the rich are cut more or less than the taxes of the poor makes much difference to the impact of a tax cut on saving. The argument being made by the administration—that the rich save more and therefore the tax cut would benefit saving if it favored the rich—has a curious political as well as economic history. In reverse, it is the same argument that used to be made by liberals—that tax cuts ought to favor the poor because they were more likely to spend it, and what the economy needed was a boost in spending that would pull income and subequently saving along with it. But after long and careful examination of the data, it turned out that there really wasn't much difference between what the poor did with an extra dollar of income and what the rich did with it—they were likely to spend it on different things, and the rich might be more likely to save by adding to assets while the poor saved by paying off debt, but they apparently didn't have very different propensities to spend. If that was true when liberals were arguing for tax cuts which favored the poor in order to stimulate consumption, it ought to be equally true now when conservatives are arguing for high-income tax cuts in order to stimulate saving.

Finally, the argument which says that saving incentives in the form of higher real rates of return would make a difference is also one that will not stand up on the evidence, as I read it. At least one study has found such an effect, but no one has been able to reproduce it. The studies in which I have most confidence show that real interest rates have no detectable effect on saving behavior. And that conclusion is eminently plausible on theoretical grounds: an increase in the rate of return on saving certainly provides an incentive to shift toward saving and away from spending, since saving has become more attractive. But at the same time, the higher rate of return to saving means that consumers need less assets to generate the same income return, and if the object is an income return, people can save less because they can get the target return more easily. Finding that these two effects seem to cancel out should not come as a great surprise.

Although the evidence clearly points in the direction of suggesting that neither tax cuts, income redistribution, nor higher real rates of return would do much to increase the saving rate, there still might be some impact of a supply-side type coming out of the program. If taxes are reduced substantially for high income households, investment incentives might be improved enough to warrant entrepreneurial individuals taking a more positive view of the rewards from investment. But here, it isn't so much that relatively high income entrepreneurial types would save more of their income in order to invest, but that they would see the future as more favorable, see themselves as being able to keep more of any return from investment, and be encouraged to borrow in order to expand their business. Whether the policy succeeds or fails may depend more on whether the administration can create an environment that encourages borrowing on the part of small entrepreneurs: seen in that light, prime interest rates in the neighborhood of 20 percent will not be particularly helpful.

If the policies espoused by the administration are unlikely to do much by way of increasing saving, are there other policies that might? If I were to set out to boost saving, I think I would rather work on the debt side than on the asset side. The data displayed in Chart 1, and all of our historical experience, suggest that it is very difficult to fashion policies that will have a large and permanent effect on the rate of personal saving—after all, that rate has been more or less stable for about a century, in the face of demographic and other changes far more potent than any of the proposed changes in public policy.

On the other hand, there are policies that could make for temporary improvement in the saving rate, but many of those seem to be ones that would cause consumers to change their debt behavior rather than their asset belicy of choice for an administration that wants more, not less, reliance on the free market.

An alternative, which is compatible with the general philosophy of conservatives, might be to try to affect saving by way of changing the current set of subsidies that have created an enormous demand for mortgage debt. As Chart 1 shows, the drop in the saving rate in the late 1970's seems due almost entirely to an explosion of mortgage debt. What happened is simple enough: high inflation rates, coupled with rapidly rising housing prices and interest rates that were little if any higher than the inflation rate, induced large numbers of people to "monetize" some of the capital gains they accrued when housing prices rose rapidly. Getting as much house as possible, with as much mortgage debt as possible, seemed to be a pretty good way to cope with the combination of high inflation rates and rising housing prices, provided people didn't have to undertake such transactions with mortgage interest rates in the middle or high teens. Thus getting the inflation rate down would have some impact on consumers' willingness to incur housing and other debt. Perhaps more to the point, reducing some of the subsidies associated with owner-occupied housing might well do some good. The chief subsidy here is the tax deductibility of mortgage interest and property taxes, for those who itemize income tax deductions.

Such a policy might well make sense. In earlier times, the subsidy to homeowners was a conscious national policy. It was widely thought that homeownership was a good thing, and that the government should encourage people to own their own homes rather than rent. Thus a significant subsidy to homeowners became national policy. As a result, close to 70 percent of American households now own their own homes, and the policy can be regarded as an outstanding success. But at the present time the attractive subsidies (especially for high income people) that accrue to homeownership may be serving the purpose of attractive speculative resources into the homebuilding industry, at the very time when we need to have more resources going into industrial investment. Cutting back on the deductibility of either mortgage interest or property taxes or both seems a reasonable way to do that, and would tend to balance the administration's policy of reducing the availability of subsidized housing for low income families. More importantly, perhaps, it has some prospect of causing at least a temporary bump in the saving rate that might last a few years.

Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. President, the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan has also conducted some extensive research into the savings behavior of those 65 or over that indicates the breakdown of savings rates among the elderly may be more dispersed than present assumptions. For example, 58 percent of all elderly families have less than $1,000 in asset income, and 75 percent have asset income of less than $3,000 a year. Even in those families earnings less than $10,000 a year, some 31 percent have interest and dividend income of over $1,000 a year.

Mr. President, the bill we introduce today is targeted to the elderly who earn less than $15,000 per year, and will relieve 1 million elderly citizens from having to pay any Federal income taxes.

We also should recognize that there is widespread agreement on the need to provide supplemental income to our senior citizens. By the year 2010, the elderly population is expected to be 50 percent larger, both relative to the total population and relative to our working population. Even more significant is the growing numbers of elderly who will be 85 or over. As a percentage of the total number of people over the age 65, those 85 and other made up 4.8 percent of total in 1960. By the year 2050, they will make up over 10 percent of the total.

Because of these trends, our private pension plans, social security, and medicare programs may be seriously underfunded. Both the White House Conference on the Aging and the final report of the President's Commission on Pension Policy concluded that new incentives need to be enacted to increase the supplemental income of our aged.

In summary, the pressure on our retired citizens is going to increase as we approach the 21st century. Pressures on the budget and entitlement programs will only increase and we must necessarily rely to a greater extent on individual saving to finance our retirement years. This bill will provide an important incentive for the elderly saver and is structured in a way to keep the revenue losses at a minimum. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the revenue loss will be $400 million in 1983, $1.2 billion in 1984, and $1.3 billion in 1985.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. METZENBAUM):

S. 2878. A bill to improve worker training under the Trade Act of 1974, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

WORKER TRAINING IMPROVEMENT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce for myself and my distinguished colleague from Ohio, Mr. METZENBAUM, legislation to reform and improve the trade adjustment assistance program. Our bill is identical to one introduced in the House by Congressman PEASE of Ohio and similar to S. 1868, legislation that I introduced last November 19.

I should remind this Chamber that trade adjustment assistance represents a commitment made by this Government to the American labor movement two decades ago. In exchange for labor support of trade liberalization, we created a program designed to help those workers who lost their jobs as a direct result of this liberalization. The program was called trade adjustment assistance, and it has remained a cornerstone of our trade policy for some 20 years.

I regret that this administration has shown little interest in the trade adjustment assistance program, and in fact has succeeded in altering it so that few of those for whom TAA was intended are able to benefit from it. This legislation would correct the damage done to trade adjustment assistance last year and will improve the program, emphasizing worker retraining.

Let me explain what our bill does. First, it would restore permanently the "contributed importantly" standard for determining whether or not imports resulted in job loss.

Second, it makes training an entitlement, as presently it is not. TAA is too important an element of our trade policy to be subject to indiscriminate budget cuts.

Third, the bill changes the work test to a "comparable standard" from a "suitable work test." The current standard defeats the purpose of TAA by forcing workers to accept temporary, low-paying jobs rather than long-term, skilled employment.

Fourth, our legislation creates an adjustment assistance trust fund, financed by customs duties, to fund the program.

Finally, the bill will retroactively qualify any worker who has participated in the TAA program since July 1, 1979.

A healthy trade adjustment assistance program is especially critical at a time when 10.8 million Americans are out of work, many of them for long periods of time. Our legislation will strengthen the commitment we made to labor two decades ago, and it is deserving of broad, bipartisan support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2878

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, millions of industrial workers are today without jobs. This is through no fault of their own. Caught in the midst of a domestic recession and the victims of unfair foreign competition, these jobless Americans want to work but cannot.

The steel, automobile, and rubber factories, where they once labored long and hard, no longer need their services. Yet, because they are unemployed, they lack the means to reequip themselves to find new jobs in new fields.

It is a vicious cycle. But it is also a cycle that Congress can break.

That is why Senator MOYNIHAN and I are today introducing a bill to provide a meaningful training program for industrial workers displaced by foreign imports.

For too long this Nation has sat idly by and watched countries like Japan, Korea, and Taiwan use unfair trading methods to chip away at our fundamental industries. But with more than 10 million unemployed, however, the message is beginning to hit home that it is high time to act before more American industries are destroyed and more American jobs lost. It is time for us to make sure that free trade is first and foremost fair trade.

But, Mr. President, as we strive to revitalize basic American industries, we must keep in mind the fact that we cannot put things back the way they once were. No matter what trade bills Congress enacts, no matter what import quotas we establish, no matter how much money we pour into ailing firms, many of the unemployed will not be able to return to their original jobs.

Market demands have changed. So, too, have production techniques. Many industrial jobs are gone forever. Those are plain and simple truths.

New jobs, however, do exist. Indeed, despite record high levels of unemployment, there are an estimated 1 million job openings going unfilled. But without proper training, industrial workers are precluded from obtaining them. Without some type of Federal training program, thousands upon thousands of otherwise capable workers will have no choice but to remain permanently unemployed.

The country cannot afford to let that happen.

Yet this is precisely the course upon which the current administration is embarked. And where workers displaced by foreign imports are concerned, the administration's response to the urgent needs of thousands of Americans is to terminate the cash benefit part of the trade adjustment program and transfer its training aspects to a larger centralized function with very limited funding within the Department of Labor.

This must not happen. The Nation has a responsibility to help give displaced industrial workers a fresh start. We must encourage, not discourage, any person with the ambition and desire to learn a new skill. The legislation we are introducing today recognizes this by providing to these workers a one-time opportunity to reequip and retrain themselves so that they may find new employment in different lines of work.

This is prudent policy. It will cost us far less in the long run to retrain workers so that they can reenter the work force than it will to pay for unemployment compensation, welfare, and food stamp benefits. Furthermore, retraining workers will help America develop a work force with those skills needed to remain competitive in the 21st century.

The bill is relatively simple. It amends the Trade Act of 1974 to provide training benefits to more workers who lose their jobs because of foreign imports. And it will be financed from customs duties levied on foreign imports, not from new taxes.

Today, what little funding exists for Federal job training programs is almost exclusively targeted to the structurally unemployed and to disadvantaged youth. These programs are essential. However, we should also provide meaningful job training for displaced industrial workers. The bill we are introducing today will help us accomplish this goal.●

S.J. Res. 237. Joint resolution designating November 14, 1982, as "National Retired Teachers Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL RETIRED TEACHERS DAY

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, it is a privilege to introduce this joint resolution in the Senate designating November 14, 1982, as "National Retired Teachers Day." We owe a debt of gratitude to all retired teachers in America for what they have contributed to the education and character of our young people. No other individual, outside the family, exerts so much influence on young citizens as the classroom teacher. It is only fitting that we set aside a day to honor teachers who have devoted their careers to serving our children and communities.

Education is the key to employment and success in America. Education makes possible the continuation of our democratic process through an informed electorate. Education is the means by which we compete with foreign markets, increase our productivity, and develop the high technology skills for defense and commercial industries. Education plays a crucial role in our citizens' ability to choose healthy lifestyles, positive attitudes, and humane values. And study after study has shown that the critical element in the educational process is not the textbook, the curriculum, the size of the classroom, or the audiovisual aides, but rather, the skills and character of the teacher.

Today there are many disincentives to the young man or woman who is thinking of choosing teaching as a career. Public education is often criticized or even blamed for our Nation's ills. Teacher salaries are low in relation to what can be earned in private industry or government. Paperwork and redtape, discipline problems, and administrative duties drain time and energy from the task of teaching. It is no wonder that many enthusiastic, dedicated educators leave the profession long before retirement.

Let us show our appreciation and our understanding of the devotion shown by teachers who remain in the classroom to retirement by setting aside a day in their honor. Most of us, when asked why we chose a profession or achieved a worthy goal or adopted a positive value, can name a particular teacher who influenced us early in life. I hope we all take the opportunity on November 14 to say a word of thanks to the teachers who have meant a lot to us.

Let us also use November 14 as a day to show educators who are still in the classroom that we support them in their efforts and are willing to do our part to strengthen the schools. The future of education in this country is not only in the hands of educators, but also rests in the commitment of parents, students, and communities to maintain the finest free education system in the world.●

S.J. Res. 238. A joint resolution to designate October 9, 1982, as "National Running and Fitness Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL RUNNING AND FITNESS DAY

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am introducing today a Senate resolution which would request the President to declare October 9, 1982, "National Running and Fitness Day."

National Running and Fitness Day began as National Jogging Day in 1971 in an effort to encourage Americans to actively pursue some form of exercise and to especially encourage jogging as a way to stay physically fit. The purpose of this day is to encourage people to make safe, enjoyable exercise a part of their daily activity.

The primary sponsor of this annual event is the American Running and Fitness Association, formerly the National Jogging Association, which is in its second decade of service. In the opinion of the association, its new name more clearly defines their commitment as an independent voluntary association of individuals dedicated to the promotion of aerobic health through safe and enjoyable exercise, especially running. The members of this nonprofit educational organization number more than 35,000 people, all of whom realize that physical fitness and good health go hand-in-hand.

This year, National Running and Fitness Day is being sponsored by the American Running and Fitness Association, in cooperation with the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports, the Governors' Councils on Physical Fitness and Sports, the National Recreation and Park Association, the YMCA, the American Podiatry Association, the American Academy of Podiatric Sports Medicine, and the American Medical Joggers Association.

National Running and Fitness Day is a proven success in getting the American people actively involved in the pursuit of improved physical fitness and a healthier way of life.

I hope my fellow Senators will give this resolution, which requires no expenditure of Government funds, their full support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be printed in the RECORD following these remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD: as follows:

S.J. RES. 238

Whereas the public awareness of the need for maintaining physical fitness is becoming increasingly evident;

Whereas jogging is an excellent, convenient, and inexpensive form of exercise that provides opportunities for a graduated program of physical fitness for most individuals regardless of age, sex, or level of fitness;

Whereas numerous medical authorities believe that a regular, sensible jogging program improves the function of the cardiovascular system, reduces coronary risk factors, and serves as an advisable supplement to weight-reducing or weight-control program;

Whereas a positive correlation exists between the development of a fit body and the ability to experience an enriched and more satisfying life; and

Whereas an estimated thirty million persons all across America jog or run as a recreation activity which is beneficial and enjoyable: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation declaring October 9, 1982, as "National Running and Fitness Day", and calling upon the people of the United States and interested groups to celebrate such day by participating in fitness-related sports, seminars, and other events throughout the United States and to incorporate regular exercise into their everyday lives.

SENATE RESOLUTION 454—RESOLUTION RELATING TO THE AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL SITUATION

Mrs. KASSEBAUM (for herself, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. INOUYE) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

S. RES. 454

Whereas, Since August 3, 1981, the Nation's air traffic control system has been operated by a reduced air traffic controller workforce that is severely below the level considered by the Federal Aviation Administration to be fully operational;

Whereas, replacement of the diminished workforce at the current rate of training and employment being implemented by the Federal Aviation Administration will not result in a fully operational air traffic controller workforce until 1988, at the earliest;

Whereas, the airline industry has been restricted severely by the reduced capacity of the air traffic system which has created inequities and distorted the competitive process;

Whereas, the airline industry has been one of the most severely affected by the recessions of 1980 and 1981 and by additional unique problems such as a $6,000,000,000 increase in fuel costs since 1979 and pricing challenges created by the ongoing transition to complete deregulation; and

Whereas, there exists a substantial number of dismissed controllers who may be eligible for reinstatement, and other qualified individuals barred by the age 30 hiring rule: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Department of Transportation has not utilized fully the human resources available to restore the capacity of the air traffic control system; and that immediate steps should be taken to waive the age 30 hiring rule and to expedite the processing of appeals of former traffic controllers seeking reinstatement.

SENATE RESOLUTION 455—RELATIVE TO THE STATUS OF PACIFIC SALMON STOCKS

Mr. MURKOWSKI (for himself, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. GORTON, Mr. HATFIELD, and Mr. JACKSON) submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

S. RES. 455

Whereas Pacific Salmon orginating in the waters of Washington, Oregon, British Columbia, and Alaska wander freely across boundaries, both as rearing juveniles and maturing fish bound for their spawning streams;

Whereas as a result of this migratory pattern, fish of one country are caught in the fisheries of the other country both as an incidental harvest to domestic salmon fisheries and, in some cases, in targeted fisheries;

Whereas the mixed stock nature of Chinook (King Salmon) fisheries which harvest fish both as immatures and matures (due to their long life history at sea) complicates the management of this species, which must also take into account attempts to harvest both healthy stocks and hatchery stocks, as well providing for the conservation needs of depressed stocks, and not neglecting that this species also enters many different forms of fishery and is taken by a number of different user groups: commercial, recreational, and personal use in the United States and Canada;

Whereas severe conservation problems have been identified with most Chinook stocks from the Columbia River to Southeastern Alaska and recent work by scientists of both nations has highlighted stock problems in British Columbia, where those stocks are estimated to be reaching only one-third of their optimum escapement requirements;

Whereas Chinook salmon fisheries in British Columbia harvest well over one million Chinook salmon annually compared to a harvest of slightly more than 250,000 fish in Southeast Alaska as a result of the adoption by the State of Alaska of a 15-year rebuilding program designed to return natural Chinook runs in major rivers in Southeast Alaska to their historical levels of abundance;

Whereas the realization that neither country will be able to optimize production from its salmon stocks without an agreed upon set of management ground rules governing intercepting fisheries on both sides of the border and recognizing that unregulated escalation of interceptions and intercepting fisheries in British Columbia can only aggravate the allocation and conservation problems currently being faced by both nations;

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Secretary Commerce should take all appropriate steps necessary to strengthen and define a United States position that will ensure: (1) That our anadromous fish stocks are perpetuated at productive levels, (2) That our fishermen are treated in an equitable manner in terms of sacrifices necessary to achieve conservation goals, (3) That interception problems are addressed in a manner having minimum impact on our user groups; and report back to Congress on at least a semiannual basis progress in these areas.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I have submitted a resolution instructing the Secretary of Commerce to strengthen and define his position regarding the status of Pacific salmon stocks. The problem we have with this west coast fishery is extremely serious and deserves immediate, priority attention. Should ongoing negotiations with Canada fail to produce a substantive cooperative management plan and should the status quo continue, we—the United States—and Canada can expect the demise of this important industry and valuable food resource in the Pacific Northwest.

Severe conservation problems have been identified with most Chinook (king salmon) stocks from Oregon to southeastern Alaska. However, scientific research conducted by both the United States and Canada has also highlighted severe stock problems in British Columbia, where stocks are estimated to be reaching only one-third of their optimum escapement requirements.

Canadian Fisheries and Ocean Ministry statistics indicate that the total coastwide catch of Canadian Chinook salmon by Canadian and United States commercial, sports, and native food fisheries for the period 1976–80 averaged 1,176,000 fish, while the average escapement during the same period was only 194,000 fish. In other words, it indicates a fishing mortality of nearly 86 percent of the total stocks. It is generally believed that Chinook stocks cannot withstand a fishing pressure of more than 70 percent. It is our opinion, buttressed by scientific research, that Canadian overfishing in British Columbian waters, on both United States and Canadian stocks is primarily responsible for these high mortality and low escapement figures.

Canadian Fisheries and Ocean Minister Romeo LeBlanc has stated that:

Despite the substantial salmon enhancement work and conservation restrictions introduced in 1981 and previous years, escapements of wild Chinook to British Columbia coastal streams and rivers is less then 50 percent of that required for optimum production. This situation means that to save the stock we must impose more strict catch restrictions * * *.

Canadian fishery management actions proposed for implementation this year are designed to increase 1982 British Columbia Chinook spawning escapements by 20,000 fish. This reduction in take seems inconsequential given the fact that Chinook harvest by British Columbia fishermen is expected to be well over 1 million fish. Their conservation measures over recent years have been aimed principally at the commercial net fisheries whose catch of Chinook salmon currently represents only 16 percent of the total catch of Canadian Chinooks. Not enough has been done to curtail harvests in the troll fishery.

Southeast Alaska catches of Chinook for the period 1970–80 have averaged 301,000. This year, despite strong opposition from our fishermen, we set our quota at 255,500 fish, a 15-percent reduction over our 10-year historical catch level. This was done to protect stocks and to insure productive harvest levels in the future. Similar Canadian conservation efforts to increase 1982 British Columbia spawning escapements by 20,000 fish will amount to a 2-percent reduction in quota assuming a harvest of at least 1 million fish. It seems obvious that any actions taken in southeast Alaska to conserve Chinook stocks will be doomed to failure unless other jurisdictions also take significant conservatory actions.

I have submitted this resolution today to bring to the attention of my colleagues and the the administration the severity of this problem and to impress upon all concerned that action taken too late or not at all will entail significant costs in terms of a declining industry and fishery.

To my colleagues here today I urge the consideration and passage of this resolution. To the administration and related individuals, I ask that an accord with the Canadians be reached expeditiously that will insure the proper, cooperative management of all salmon stocks for the benefit of all citizens in the Pacific Northwest.

PACIFIC FISHERIES

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I support the resolution offered by my good friend Senator MURKOWSKI. The salmon stocks of the Northwest are in grave condition, Mr. President, and while the Department of State is aware of the problem, we have not been able to apply uniform conservation principles along the entire north Pacific coast. Meanwhile, chinook salmon stocks are being depleted because of inconsistent management regimes between the United States and Canada.

The unfortunate result from this inconsistent management between our two nations is an ever increasing burden that is being placed on troll fishermen in southeast Alaska and in Washington and Oregon. This burden of ever more extreme reductions in harvest levels on the U.S. side are not resulting in greater escapement for conservation purposes because of increased interceptions by Canadian fishermen on these stocks. The end result, if it is not dealt with immediately, will be to further deplete these stocks down the line, and to injure all of the participants in the fishery—United States and Canadian fishermen.

The United States-Canada salmon negotiations are well into a third decade of discussions, and the opportunity to work out a management regime may come as early as this fall. However, that agreement must contain a fair apportionment of responsibility to meet the conservation needs of the fishery, or it will crumble as soon as it is completed. The plight of the west coast chinook salmon has not been fully addressed to date, and I hope that the Secretaries of State and Commerce will take note of congressional concern in this matter, and undertake a fundamental reexamination of the chinook salmon problem prior to the continuation of the discussions this fall.

Several months ago I wrote to Secretary Baldrige on this problem. I am pleased that he understands that we cannot continue to make unilateral sacrifices without cooperation from the other user groups. A copy of his letter to me on this problem is attached.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, D.C., June 11, 1982.

Hon. TED STEVENS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR TED: Thank you for your letter and enclosed correspondence from B. F. Thompson, concerning harvest reductions in the Alaska troll salmon fishery.

I support the North Pacific Fishery Management Council's decision to limit the 1982 harvest of chinook salmon to 255,500 and to use in-season closures in the management of the 1982 high seas salmon troll fishery off Southeast Alaska (47 F.R. 20830) to achieve that goal. This strategy is appropriate and consistent with the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act. Because the Council is operating under an approved fishery management plan within an optimum yield range of 243,000–272,000, Secretarial approval of the Council action is not required. I am, however, reviewing the Council's overall fishery management plan for high seas salmon in light of continuing litigation; that is, Confederated Tribes v. Baldrige.

I recognize the sacrifices that have been made in the interest of conservation and management by the Alaska salmon fishermen and rural communities that are heavily dependent on the troll fishery for their economic well-being. Continued sacrifices cannot be justified, however, if all the chinook salmon saved in Alaska are caught in fisheries outside Alaska or mysteriously disappear after entering their spawing rivers. While this Department has limited jurisdiction over the factors contributing to salmon loss within the rivers, I am working with Federal and State agencies and with other organizations, including Indian groups, to identify and alleviate the problem. If the Pacific Northwest States make conservation efforts that result in increased spawning in the upper Columbia River, and if Canada's actions result in a potential for greater savings of fish to the spawning grounds in 1983, the Council and the Alaska Board of Fisheries have agreed to reduce the Southeast Alaska chinook harvest to 243,000 in 1983. The need for reduction of inter-dam losses and improved migrant passage was pointed out in this Department's response to the minority report on the North Pacific Council's action, submitted by Rolland Schmitten of the Washington State Department of Fisheries.

Thank you for your State's support in salmon management, and the willingness of individuals directly affected to abide by the Council's decision. Unfortunately, there is no practical, simplistic, and immediate resolution to the problem of depressed chinook stocks or the multiplicity of problems involved in the fisheries management of all five Pacific salmon species.

Sincerely,

MAC,
Secretary of Commerce.

SENATE RESOLUTION 456—RESOLUTION OPPOSING PLANS FOR WAGING AND WINNING NUCLEAR WAR

Mr. SPECTER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 456

Whereas the policy of the United States has been to maintain strategic nuclear forces solely for the purpose of deterring war;

Whereas a nuclear war cannot be "won" in any meaningful sense of the word because the resulting destruction would be so extensive;

Whereas substantial unease has developed within the United States and abroad regarding current American policy on the role of nuclear weapons in our defense;

Whereas uncertainty regarding U.S. nuclear doctrine and forces has already resulted in the stalemate, since 1976, of the arms control process designed to reduce reliance upon nuclear weapons and to minimize the risks of accidental war;

Whereas the risks of nuclear war appear greater today than ever before; and

Whereas planning to enable the United States to win a nuclear war may make nuclear war more likely: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States should not engage in planning for nuclear forces and strategies whose objective is to enable the United States to wage and win a nuclear war.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the President.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am today submitting a sense of the Senate resolution declaring that the Senate is opposed to any plan to wage and win a nuclear war. This sense of the Senate resolution follows a floor statement which I made 3 days ago on August 17, 1982, when the Senate was considering the Department of Defense authorization conference report.

While I have contemporaneously wrote to appropriate officials in the executive branch on this and related subjects, I consider it important to proceed at this time with the submission of this resolution so that its consideration may move ahead, including referral to the Subcommittee on Arms Control of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I firmly believe that it is absolute folly to plan to wage and win a nuclear war, because a nuclear war cannot be won. The consequences would be devastating, the destruction unimaginable. My concern is that any such plans and preparations will, in and of themselves, increase the likelihood of a nuclear war, which we should instead be working to avoid. The wish is father to the thought; the plan is father to the act.

Recent news accounts have reported that the U.S. Government is in the process of revising its long-standing strategy of deterrence to focus instead on developing the capabilities and strategies to prepare us to, so to speak, win a prolonged nuclear conflict. "Win" is, however, a hollow word here.

I do not know if these assertions and their implications are accurate. However, the very fact that such articles appear creates undue apprehension among our own people, among our allies, and in the minds of potential adversaries.

Recently, I returned from a trip to the Soviet Union terribly concerned by the confusion in the minds of Soviet officials responsible for policies toward the United States and its allies. It is dangerous and unwise if American officials think they enhance our own security by keeping the Soviets as confused about our nuclear war policies as the U.S. Government sometimes seeks to be. Confusion can lead to miscalculation and miscalculation to devastation that no rational person would ever intentionally, willingly accept.

I believe that, to deter war, America must be strong and that improving our strategic forces can promote the important goal of concluding arms control agreements that will restrain and, I hope, someday end the nuclear arms race and the delusions of governments throughout the world that nuclear weapons can be tolerated. Even the existence of nuclear weapons, and the nuclear stockpiles which support them, pose substantial risks to the well-being of people everywhere, since, as the people in my own State of Pennsylvania learned not too long ago, all forms of nuclear energy—peaceful or military—involve some degree of risk.

I support and have been encouraged by the President's arms control initiatives, particularly his proposals at the START and INF negotiations in Geneva. I have also supported the President's initiatives regarding nuclear arms modernization, such as the B-1 bomber and improvements in our command, control, and communications systems.

It is important not to increase the risks of accidental nuclear war by failing to improve these systems to warn our country against a possible attack and not to interpret these programs as themselves signals that the Government is more concerned with being able to conduct prolonged nuclear war than with preventing nuclear holocaust. By contrast, massive spending on civil defense programs that planners seem to suggest would effectively protect Americans from the effects of nuclear attack does make me wonder what is being contemplated by officials who propose such programing. The purpose of nuclear weapons and strategy should be to deter nuclear war, not to wage it.

If the weapons are ever used, then our policy will have monumentally failed. In order to clarify for everyone what our nuclear policy is, and to declare opposition to any planning, whether ongoing or proposed, that might make nuclear war more likely, I offer this resolution.

When I made my statement on August 17, 1982, I referred to a press report in the Philadelphia Inquirer of August 17. The report concluded with the notation that:

> They [those who advocate planning to win a nuclear war] specified that 20 million U.S. fatalities would represent a compatible level.

Twenty million U.S. fatalities, in my judgment, is totally incompatible with any rational approach. To prevent such a catastrophe and to stop any such planning, I urge my colleagues to adopt this resolution.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, I wish to advise the Senate that committee markup of legislation to reauthorize the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide (FIFRA) program has been scheduled for September 15 and 16. The markup sessions will begin at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., respectively, in room 324, Russell Senate Office Building.

CANCELLATION OF HEARINGS—SUBCOMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, the Labor Subcommittee of the Labor and Human Resources Committee has an oversight hearing scheduled on the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 for September 14, 1982. That hearing is cancelled due to the limited amount of time remaining for the 97th Congress and the workload still pending.

I am encouraged that in the past 7 weeks since the hearing was announced, meaningful discussions have commenced between those directly concerned with the health and safety conditions in out Nation's mines. I am hopeful that such exchanges will continue in the months ahead so that together we may work toward a consensus bill for introduction in the 98th Congress.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND RESERVED WATER

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of a public hearing before the Subcommittee on Public Lands and Reserved Water to receive testimony on S. 2061, to provide for the conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement of natural and cultural resources located on public and Indian lands, and for other purposes; and H.R. 4861, to en statements for the hearing record should write to the Subcommittee on Public Lands and Reserved Water, room 3104, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

For further information regarding this hearing you may wish to contact Mr. Tony Bevinetto of the subcommittee staff at 224-5161.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

EXPLANATION OF VOTE ON CONFERENCE REPORT ON TAX BILL

● Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I would like to explain my vote for the conference report on H.R. 4961, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act.

Quite frankly, there are many things I do not like about this legislation. Although it is fortunate that the bill preserves the individual tax cuts passed last year, it contains provisions which I fought against on the Senate floor including withholding on dividends and interest and tip reporting requirements. In addition, the conferees chose not to include my amendment to H.R. 4961 which would have allowed an investment tax credit for farmers for soil and water conservation expenses. I believe this amendment would have proved very helpful to our hard-pressed farmers and I will continue to fight for adoption of the conservation tax credit.

Therefore, my decision to support the conference report was not an easy one. I voted for H.R. 4961 only because I believe its passage is absolutely necessary if we are to address satisfactorily the serious budget problem facing our Government. This legislation, which will raise $98.3 billion over the next 3 years, will help alleviate the budget problem.

The real solution, of course, is to put strict controls on Government spending. I would have preferred to see Congress reduce spending further; however, in the absence of sufficient budget cuts, we must raise the revenues necessary to decrease the unacceptably high deficits projected for the coming years. This Nation cannot tolerate the $200 billion deficits that would otherwise occur.

Recently, we have seen some very encouraging economic developments. Many banks have lowered their prime interest rate to 14 percent and Wall Street is enjoying a period of vigorous trading.

These are good signs, but if we wish the economy to continue to improve, we must make some very difficult choices. I have heard repeatedly from South Dakota farmers, small business people and consumers that they simply cannot survive with the high interest rates that have prevailed over the last 2 years. The Congress must face the fact that we cannot expect interest rates to come down further and to stay down if we do not pass this kind of legislation. The inhibitions I have about specific provisions of this bill have been overcome by the concern that the national economic recovery might be threatened unless the revenue package is adopted.

Mr. President, attached is a letter of today from Senator DOLE regarding my amendment on the farm 10 percent investment tax credit on tree-planting, soil and sector conservation.

The letter follows:

U.S. SENATE,
August 19, 1982

Hon. LARRY PRESSLER,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR LARRY: I want to assure you that the Senate Conferees fought hard for your amendment to H.R. 4961 permitting farmers to elect a 10 percent investment tax credit for those soil and water conservation expenditures that are not expensed. As you recall I supported the provision on the Senate floor and agreed with you that it would be very beneficial for our farmers. Unfortunately, the House Conferees would not agree to the amendment.

I expect that the Finance Committee will consider the soil and water conservation credit as well as several other tax matters that do not involve a substantial revenue loss at an early time.

Sincerely yours,

BOB DOLE.●

NOMINATION OF OLIVER G. RICHARD III, TO THE FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION

● Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, earlier the Senate confirmed the nomination of Olvier G. Richard III to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC).

This is an important nomination to a commission that touches the lives of every American. Because of the significance of this position, I feel I must express my opposition to the Richard nomination.

First and foremost, my opposition to this nomination is in no way related to Mr. Richard's character or qualifications. On the contrary, I understand he is a person of fine character and possesses the highest qualifications to serve on the Commission. Rather my objection lies in the general and marked imbalance that would be created within the Commission should Mr. Richard be confirmed.

Let me explain. Of the Commission's present membership, two individuals are from the State of Texas, a major energy producer, one is from Virginia, and another is from Hawaii, a State far removed from the natural gas distribution system.

As we can see, energy-producing States are well represented. Mr. Richard, who is from the State of Louisiana, would add another voice from these States. Thus, this nomination would further the imbalance between energy-producing States and energy-dependent States, such as those in the Midwest and Northeast.

Mr. President, the decisions of the Commission impact every American in every State. In order to increase public confidence we need a board member who geographically provides representation for States that are energy dependent.

For this reason I object to this nomination and would have voted no had there been a rollcall vote.●

NATIONAL DEFENSE EDUCATION ACT

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the Soviet launch of Sputnik in 1957 placed our Nation on notice that we could no longer take technological superiority for granted. In response, Congress passed the National Defense Education Act (NDEA). This $1 billion education program was geared basically to science, mathematics, and foreign languages.

The NDEA was a great success. Its most dramatic result, of course, was the man-on-the-Moon landing in 1969. Unfortunately, however, our commitment to science education has lapsed since then.

That is unfortunate. For a Federal commitment to science education is not a commitment to an isolated special interest group. On the contrary, it is a commitment to the future of our Nation.

The public recognizes this and wants Federal support for science education. A 1980 poll of the general public asked, To which areas would it be most beneficial to assign public science and technology dollars? Among the 14 priorities listed, education ranked third, finishing ahead of such priorities as developing or improving weapons for national defense, reducing crime, or reducing and controlling pollution.

In spite of the public consensus that science education is vital, the quality of teaching science and mathematics has greatly deteriorated. The National Academy of Sciences has emphasized that the state of high school science and mathematics teaching is "scandalous."

Many secondary school science and mathematics teachers are unqualified to teach. They continue to teach nonetheless on an emergency basis due to a critical shortage of qualified science and mathematics teachers. The shocking fact is that at least 30 percent of the Nation's high school students who graduated last year did not have a qualified teacher in either science or mathematics.

This lack of basic science and mathematics training will have a profound effect on the Nation's future. Recent evidence proves this to be true.

One example is the declining growth rate in manufacturing productivity. Many factors obviously play a role in this situation. But it is relevant that Japan, France, West Germany, and the Soviet Union, all of which have witnessed substantial growth in manufacturing productivity, unlike the United States, are producing the manpower and skilled labor force necessary for high-technology industries.

In addition, while the United States is experiencing a decline in the standards of secondary education, these same countries are raising the standards of secondary education. Not surprisingly, they are placing greater emphasis on science and mathematics at all levels of education than is the United States.

This deterioration of the Nation's secondary school education must not be allowed to continue. Congress must take the necessary steps to insure a qualified science and mathematics faculty in secondary schools. In the near future, I plan to introduce legislation that will address the secondary school science and mathematics teaching problem.

Mr. President, to illustrate the seriousness of the decline in science and mathematics education, I ask consent that the following article from the August 8 issue of the Washington Post be inserted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

EQUATION FOR A TEACHING CRISIS

(By Donna Hilts)

At a recent convocation of the National Academy of Sciences, a group not easily pushed to overstatement, scientists and educators called the state of high school science and mathematics teaching in this country "scandalous." What's more, they agreed, most students graduating from high school are "scientifically illiterate."

The shortage of teachers is critical: In New York and Minnesota last year, according to Academy president Frank Press, not one university graduate qualified to teach high school science actually did so. In the Washington area, universities are graduating only a handful of high school math and science teachers, a trickle not large enough to supply the major school districts in Maryland, Virginia, and the District.

Pirating teachers has become a national way of life. Hightech industries, desperate for engineers and other technically skilled workers, are not only raiding college faculties but offering new graduates $10,000 more to start than the $14,000 they could get teaching in area high schools. Colleges and industry in turn are stealing teachers from high schools, according to area educators. As a result, those left behind to teach the young in the public schools are often neither sufficiently competent nor enthusiastic to inspire their students to the wonder of the quark or the beauty of an equation.

The crisis looms at a time when America's economic future depends on the expansion of its high technology industries—computers, robotics, laser optics, genetic engineering. And yet not nearly enough people are being trained to fill these jobs. In Massachusetts, Itek Corporation chairman Robert P. Henderson recently told a congressional hearing, the inability of these industries to find enough technically trained workers to fully staff their facilities had lost the state half a billion dollars in personal income revenue.

No one is quite sure why or how this crisis in science education happened. Television, Vietnam and the upheaval of the '60s, which forced lower school standards across the board, are commonly blamed. But it is certain, as Dr. Wade Gilley at George Manson University puts it, that while the high technology express rumbled into America, "We as a nation were asleep at the switch."

As a result, we have begun a national scramble to catch up. The National Science Board, which directs the National Science Foundation, has set up a panel of experts to find some answers, fast. And the Department of Education has put its own National Commission on Excellence in Education in place. Meanwhile local schools and industries have been left to assemble their own patchwork solutions.

The decline, some would even call it disgrace, of a nation that has long prized its technological ingenuity, can be read in recent statistics from the National Science Foundation:

In 1981, half the newly hired math and science teachers in high school were not qualified to teach those subjects. Forty-three states reported shortages of math teachers; nearly as many lacked enough physics teachers. More alarming, the average education major today scores significantly lower on standardized aptitude and achievement tests than other college students.

The performance of students, not unexpectedly, is equally dismal. The number of college freshmen needing remedial help in math jumped 72 percent from 1975 to 1980. On SATs and national assessment tests administered by the U.S. department of education during the past 10 years, 17-year-olds have scored increasingly badly in math and science. Many give up entirely by senior high: one half of all high school graduates in the United States take no math or science beyond 10th grade.

What is more, many experts are beginning to worry, not only about the quantity of science and math education, but also the quality. Henry Pollak, head of math and statistics research for Bell Laboratories, the nation's premier industrial lab, said recently, "Since 1940 the amount of math known has doubled every 10 years so that we now know about 16 times more math than we did then, but none of it has found its way into the schools."

In the Washington-area, public school systems, although admittedly better off than many places, have already begun to feel the crisis. "We're in a state of mild panic right now," admits James Shinn, director of employment services for Fairfax County schools. Despite the system being one of the most affluent and most highly regarded in the nation, Shinn expects to open this fall with uncertified substitutes filling several math and earth science teaching slots. The county's saving grace, he says, is that the quality of their substitutes is so high. Most are quite proficient in their fields, but lack the necessary teaching credentials for state certification.

In Montgomery county, where dwindling enrollments have caused massive school closings, there is a temporary surplus of math and science teachers, according to John Pancella, coordinator of secondary science for the schools. In Prince George's, the school system's recent $30 million budget cut forced the firing of more than 500 teachers, 16 high school math and science teachers among them. Those with provisional certificates were the first to be laid off.

"I don't want to imply there isn't a problem," said Carl McMillen, director of personnel for the Prince George's system. "There has been for the past several years. . . . As time goes on, if the student population increases, there will be a continuing and worsening shortage in math and science teachers, particularly in physics and chemistry."

Conard Seeboth, supervisor of mathematics for Prince George's is equally pessimistic: "In the junior high, middle school, and elementary levels, we definitely need to beef up the competence of some of our teachers." Already, the system is trying to retrain some of its teachers by offering courses in algebra and geometry. "Many of them haven't had those subjects since high school," he said. "They're very rusty."

In the District, officials have sent a desperate appeal to area universities to fill several math and physics teaching posts before school begins. Although exact figures are not available, Mary B. Harbeck, supervising director of science, said she recently lost two "excellent teachers," one to industry, the other to a college. "The shortage really exists in good teachers," she said. "There are people available who are certified, but not qualified."

To ease the problem, most area school districts are pushing to find teachers within their own systems who are near certification in the critical fields and help them become qualified. In Montgomery and Fairfax, this includes some financial help for teachers' course work at area universities.

Even in Montgomery, where the school system's reputation, prime location, and relatively high salaries make it attractive to teachers, school officals worry about the near future. "I have an aged faculty," said Pancella. "My concern is in four or five years." Fairfax director Shinn agrees. In five years, shortages will be really severe, he said. "The supply will shrink, and we're frightening people out when we say there is an [overall] surplus of teachers."

The recent graduating classes of area universities indicate the kind of future shortage Shinn fears. At George Washington University, there were no graduates in secondary math and science education. At the University of Maryland, one of the largest teaching institutions in the area, out of 179 secondary education graduates, seven were qualified in math, only four in science, whild 43 majored in early-childhood education, and 19 in art.

George Mason University vice president Gilley estimates that half the jobs in Fairfax County are in high-tech industries. Yet people to teach youngsters to fill those jobs are not being trained in sufficient numbers. At George Mason only two students graduated in secondary math education last year, none in physics or chemistry.

George Mason, however, recently has begun a new partnership with county industries, which it hopes will "build a critical mass of first-rate faculty," said Gilley.

The new Institute of Science and Technology at George Mason will attempt to tap the highly paid talent, and expensive equipment, of the county's 424 high tech firms, those specializing in computers, software, and research and development among them.

Executives will be offered part-time teaching posts and help develop the university's science curriculum; they will in turn have access to the university's pool of manpower, professors and students, to carry out understaffed projects, said Gilley.

Such a solution, however, may do little to ease the drain of teaching talent below the college level. Gilley points out that in the past decade the number of technological companies in Fairfax has jumped from 135 to 424, and the number of jobs in these industries has more than doubled. "Firms are locating here now almost weekly," he said.

So where does that leave the coming generation of young people, who cannot possibly compete in the marketplace of microchips and robots if they are not somehow encouraged in science early on? The Washington area reflects what is happening nationally. There is a growing gap of information between rich and poor, the educated haves and have nots. In Montgomery County, for instance, more students than ever before are enrolling in advanced science courses and entering science fairs. While in the District's inner city, said science director Harbeck, "We have some young people—and some adults—who think the landing on the moon was a big science fiction extravaganza on T.V. They just don't believe it happened."

"The danger," wrote Academy of Sciences president Frank Press recently, "is not in failing to train the gifted who wish to be scientists and engineers; they still seem to receive the requisite education and opportunities. Rather, it is in raising a generation of Americans who lack the education to participate in a technological age; in failing to assure the scientific literacy of Americans, whatever their future vocations."

How America can be so tranformed, it is hoped by many, will be outlined by the National Science Board's new Commission on Precollege Education in Mathematics, Science and Technology. The 20 men and women on the panel were chosen for their credentials in industry, defense, science and education. They consider their mandate, according to commission executive director Richard S. Nicholson, to write a national science education policy.

Some believe not only the economic health, but the safety of America's future depends on it. In West Germany and Japan, where the governments have persuaded their citizens of the importance of technology and encouraged increasing numbers of young people to enter engineering and other technical fields, industrial productivity has increased far more rapidly than it has in the United States.

America's lag in technological education has perhaps more frightening implications in the state of the country's defense—not missiles and bombs, but the people who will control them.

"We can't compete with a driver of a tank from the Soviet Union who has two years of calculus when we have to write our manuals at the sixth-grade level in comic book style," Nicholson said.

SCIENCE AND MATH EDUCATION: HOW AMERICA COMPARES

These facts about science and math education in America, the Soviet Union, East Germany, the People's Republic of China, and Japan were assembled by the National Academy of Sciences:

The school year abroad averages 240 days: minimal time is lost to absences. Ours averages 180 days with a loss of one month on the average due to absences. Their school week is 5.5 or six days and includes a six to eight hour school day; we have a five day week and an average school day of four to five hours.

Specially trained science and mathematics teachers take over in grade four abroad, not until grade seven in our schools.

Courses in mathematics (other than arithmetic or general math), biology, chemistry, physics, and geography start in grade six and are required of all students.

The time spent on these subjects, based on class hours, is about three times that of even the most science-oriented U.S. students, i.e., those that select four years of science and mathematics in secondary school.

Other subjects are not slighted at the expense of science and mathematics. Language study is encouraged, partly to make contact with scientific and technology information in other languages. More students and adults are learning English in China than there are English-speaking people in the U.S.

In addition, the Soviet Union has just instituted a reform of its school system which makes it the most advanced in the world, according to the National Science Foundation. The number of high school students taking calculus each year in the Soviet Union has reached 5 million. For the United States the comparable number in 1977 was 105,000. In addition to two years of calculus, all youngsters in the Soviet Union are required to complete 5 years of physics, four years of chemistry, four years of biology and five years of algebra.●

UPPER MISSISSIPPI RIVER

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I am proud to announce that I am cosponsoring legislation which will provide for enhanced environmental management of the upper Mississippi River.

This legislation, introduced by Senator DANFORTH with 11 Senators from States along the Mississippi, not only provides for the needs of commercial navigation but recognizes that the environmental concerns of the upper Mississippi are equally important.

The Mississippi River is the only waterway in the United States that has been designated as part of both the National Wildlife Refuge System and the National Waterway Transportation System. As a result, there are differing interests competing for the river's resources which must be recognized in the management policy of this river.

Past management of the upper Mississippi has been dominated by commercial interests. This imbalance threatens many of the most significant natural amenities of the river. S. 2861, while providing for the continued commercial use of this waterway, orders the Federal Government to work with the States to give greater priority to the environmental health of the river.

The importance of protecting the environmental quality of this area is twofold. First, the upper Mississippi, a key element of the Mississippi flyway, is a vital link in the life cycle of nearly three-fourths of the Nation's migratory waterfowl. The river is important to the viability of other forms of wildlife as well. S. 2861 recognizes this fact, and establishes a long-term environmental management program for the river and its tributaries.

In addition, the recreational uses of this river make substantial contributions to local economies. In Wisconsin alone, over $234 million can be directly attributed to the recreational use of this waterway each year. In fact, the recreational uses of the river play a greater role in the local economy in Wisconsin than does commercial navigation.

While shipping along the upper Mississippi is overshadowed by other uses in Wisconsin, I recognize the key role of this transportation artery to other States. The adoption of this legislation will eliminate the bottleneck currently restraining navigation on the Mississippi River.

For these compelling reasons, we must act to correct the errors of past management practices. We can no longer stand by and watch the deterioration of this resource. For this reason, I am pleased to join with 11 of my colleagues in support of S. 2861.●

THE FBI'S RELUCTANCE TO COOPERATE WITH DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AUDITORS

● Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of the Senate a sad story. It is the story of how, even though the years pass, administrations change and Attorneys General come and go, the Department of Justice continues to strive to operate under the veil of secrecy.

I firmly believe that the citizens of this Nation are the best judges of Government actions. And for the public to act in their role as judges, they must have access to information about their Government. Access to information is a right that has been used effectively in this country for centuries to improve Government operations as well as society in general. Unfortunately, this view is apparently not shared by too many top officials at the Department of Justice.

As an example of this reluctance to let the people of this Nation know about the Government they pay for, I ask that a series of letters between myself and the Department of Justice be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The letter follows:

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SEPARATION OF POWERS,
February 1, 1982.

Hon. WILLIAM FRENCH SMITH,
Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I would appreciate receiving a copy of the audit report entitled, "Acquisition, Control, and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation" completed by the audit staff of the Department of Justice. In addition, please provide me with copies of all written determinations made on the audit findings by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Thank you for your attention to this request.

With best personal regards, I am
Sincerely,

MAX BAUCUS,
Ranking Minority Member.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D.C. March 23, 1982

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: The audit report "Acquisition, Control, and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation" that you requested in your February 1, 1982 letter to the Attorney General is enclosed.

You will recall that I responded by letter of March 3, 1982, explaining that the audit report would be sent to you as soon as it was issued.

Thank you for your interest in the Department of Justice.

Sincerely,

KEVIN D. ROONEY,
Assistant Attorney General for Administration.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SEPARATION OF POWERS,
April 2, 1982

Hon. KEVIN D. ROONEY,
Assistant Attorney General for Administration, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. ROONEY: Thank you for providing me with a copy of the audit report, "Acquisition, Control, and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation." I note, however, in Appendix A of the report, pages 7 through 15 were deleted from the final report. I would appreciate receiving copies of those pages from the draft report.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

With best personal regard, I am
Sincerely,

MAX BAUCUS,
Ranking Minority Member.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
April 22, 1982, Washington, D.C.

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on the Judiciary, Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: Your letter of April 2, 1982 acknowledges receipt of the audit report, "Acquisition, Control and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation," provided in response to your earlier request. Your letter also requests copies of the deleted pages 7-15 referenced in the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) response to the working draft report (Appendix A of the final report).

The Department's Audit Staff customarily submits all "working draft" reports pertaining to the FBI to the appropriate FBI officials for a "sensitivity review" before the draft audit report is prepared for distribution and comment. This review process ensures that the auditors have not inadvertently revealed classified or other sensitive investigative information, and allows the FBI officials and the auditors to discuss and clarify any misunderstandings that may be relevant to the audit findings. Subsequent to this review, necessary changes are made and the draft audit report is issued for formal review and comment.

In the case of the audit you referenced, the FBI formally responded to the "working draft" report rather than waiting for the draft report to be issued. The other respondees (Appendices B, C, D and E) commented on the draft report. It is the position of the Audit Staff that working papers and draft reports should not be released, for to do so would undermine the willingness of auditees to be candid and forthright with the auditors. You can be assured, however, that all appropriate audit findings were included in the final audit report.

For these reasons, it would be inappropriate for the Department to release copies of the "working draft." If you would like to discuss this matter further, the Director of the Audit Staff, Guy K. Zimmerman, and I would be available to meet with you to explain the circumstances and actions taken as a result of the "sensitivity review" with the FBI. Your staff may also contact Mr. Zimmerman directly on this matter.

Thank you for your continued interest in the Department of Justice.

Sincerely,

KEVIN D. ROONEY,
Assistant Attorney General for Administration.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SEPARATION OF POWERS,
May 11, 1982.

Hon. KEVIN D. ROONEY,
Assistant Attorney General for Administration, Department of Justice, Washington D.C.

DEAR MR. ROONEY: I am in receipt of your letter of April 22, 1982 concerning my request for copies of the deleted pages of the audit report, "Acquisition, Control and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation." I am troubled by the Department of Justice's continuing reluctance to cooperate with members of Congress.

As you may know, I have been a strong supporter for an active and independent audit program at the Department of Justice in the past and am a cosponsor of legislation that would establish an Inspector General at the Department of Justice. Your Audit Staff Director, Mr. Guy Zimmerman, informed my staff that the deleted pages deal directly with the FBI's reluctance to cooperate with Department of Justice auditors. I therefore request, once again, that you provide me with copies of the deleted pages. In addition, I understand that a management communication was sent by you to FBI Director Webster concerning the FBI's reluctance to cooperate with the auditors. I would appreciate receiving from you a copy of that communication also. If you decide not to provide me with copies of the deleted pages of the management communication, please provide me with your specific legal reasons for denying my request.

With best personal regards, I am
Sincerely,

MAX BAUCUS,
Ranking Minority Member.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, D.C., July 7, 1982.

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: This is in further response to your letter of May 11, 1982 concerning the audit report the Department recently provided you on "Acquisition, Control and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation." Your letter requests: (1) copies of the deleted pages of the audit report, and (2) the management communication that was sent to Director Webster concerning this audit.

It is important to note that no pages were deleted from the audit report. As explained by the Assistant Attorney General for Administration, Kevin D. Rooney, in his letter of April 22, 1982, the pages to which you refer were in the "working draft report" that was submitted to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) for sensitivity review and comment.

This review process ensures that the auditors have not inadvertently revealed classified or other sensitive investigative information, and allows the FBI officials and the auditors to discuss and clarify any misunderstandings that may be relevant to the audit findings. Obtaining advance review and comments by officials of the audited entity is a requirement included in the General Accounting Office "Standards for Audit of Governmental Organizations, Programs, Activities, and Functions."

Subsequent to the FBI review, necessary changes were made and the audit report was issued. In addition, a management communication was sent to Director Webster to clarify several misunderstandings that existed but, which were adequately addressed during the review process.

You will recall that Assistant Attorney General Rooney pointed out that it is the position of the Audit Staff that audit working papers and draft reports should not be released, for to do so would undermine the willingness of auditees to be candid and forthright with the auditors. Likewise, it is the Audit Staff's position that the release of the management communication to Director Webster would be detrimental to the audit process in the Department. I understand that the Audit Staff Director, Guy K. Zimmerman, discussed this matter at length with your staff trying to explain the situation, why it was handled the way it was, and why the Audit Staff opposes the release of these materials.

Please be assured that the Department very much wishes to cooperate with Members of Congress and, frankly I am unaware of any continuing reluctance to cooperate with Members. However, your request for pages from a working draft audit report that had not been completely reviewed for accuracy and adequacy of support, convincingness, objectivity, clarity and simplicity, conciseness, completeness, and constructiveness of tone must be denied. Likewise, it would serve no appropriate and constructive purpose to provide you with the communication between management officials clarifying misunderstandings that were addressed and resolved in the audit review process. To do otherwise could be detrimental to the necessary, appropriate and candid communications that must take place between the Department's auditors and management officials.

Therefore, the Department respectfully asks your understanding of why we are unable to furnish these internal deliberative materials.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MCCONNELL,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. BAUCUS. As my colleagues will note from reading this correspondence, on February 1, 1982, I wrote attorney General Smith and requested a copy of a DOJ audit report entitled, "Acquisition, Control, and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation." Mr. Kevin Rooney, Assistant Attorney General for Administration, provided me with a copy of the final report on March 23, 1982.

In reviewing the report, I noticed that nine pages had been deleted from appendix A. On April 2, 1982, I requested that Mr. Rooney provide me with a copy of those deleted pages.

Mr. Rooney, by letter dated April 22, 1982, saw fit to deny my request. In his letter, the Assistant Attorney General for Administration stated,

It is the position of the Audit Staff that working papers and draft reports should not be released, for to do so would undermine the willingness of auditees to be candid and forthright with the auditors.

After a telephone conversation between a member of my staff and Mr. Guy Zimmerman, Director of the Audit Staff, I once again requested, by letter dated May 11, 1982, that I be provided copies of the deleted pages.

On July 7, 1982, Assistant Attorney General Robert McConnell responded to my request by stating,

• • • your request for pages from a working draft audit report that had not been completely reviewed for accuracy and adequacy of support, convincingness, objectivity, clarity and simplicity, conciseness, completeness, and constructiveness of tone must be denied.

Mr. President, I am sure that many of my colleagues would have shared my interest in knowing what the auditors had said in those nine pages that was either so inaccurate or so sensitive that a Member of the U.S. Senate could not review it let alone the general public.

First, my colleagues should know that the audit itself was fairly innocuous. I ask that the Executive Digest of the audit be placed in the RECORD at this point.

The Executive Digest follows:

AUDIT REPORT ON THE ACQUISITION, CONTROL, AND DISPOSITION OF SEIZED AND RECOVERED PROPERTY IN THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

EXECUTIVE DIGEST

The Audit Staff, Justice Management Division, has completed an audit of the Acquisition, Control, and Disposition of Seized and Recovered Property in the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

The purpose of the audit was to ascertain whether the FBI was in compliance with Federal Property Management Regulations and had established an efficient and effective system of accountability to ensure:

1. Compliance with Federal policies and procedures regarding seized and recovered property.
2. There were effective procedures and records pertaining to acquisitions.
3. There were effective custodial procedures prescribed and practiced.
4. There is effective property accountability verification.
5. Compliance with Federal policies and legal requirements respecting the disposition of seized and recovered property.

Our review covered all seized and recovered property for which the FBI was accountable whether evidentiary in nature or not, on hand, or of record, at the time of our audit.

We found that improvements are needed in:

1. Program management controls in connection with: manual guidance; accounting for seals for valuable exhibits; supervision; training; the position description of the bulky exhibit clerk; and management inspections.
2. Acquisition controls in connection with documenting acquisitions, categories of exhibits, and the packaging of, and receipting for, exhibits.
3. Custodial controls in the areas of: responsibilities of bailees; inventory records; chain of custody records; and physical inventories.
4. Elimination of storage problems created by a court order prohibiting disposition of records.
5. Dispositions in the areas of: nonevidentiary property; improperly handled dispositions; and inadequately documented dispositions.
6. The file system in connection with numbering, status, and closing of files.
7. Relationships with U.S. Attorneys.
8. Relationships with U.S. Marshals.

Our recommendations are intended to strengthen the handling of seized and recovered property in the FBI through improvements in management and procedures to provide full documentation, strong chains of custody, effective property management practices and timely, appropriate, disposals of seized and recovered property for which the FBI is accountable.

Prior to issuance of this report, copies of the draft report were forwarded to the FBI, the Property Management and Procurement Staff (PMPS) and the Personnel and Training Staff (PTS), JMD, the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys (EOUSA) and the U.S. Marshals Service for comment. Responses were received and have been included at the appropriate places in the final report with our comments which are primarily directed to FBI. The full texts of these responses are appended.

Mr. BAUCUS. As my colleagues will note, the auditors examined the FBI's compliance with Federal property management regulations with regards to seized and recovered property. Certainly not a subject that would make the FBI's list of 10 most controversial subjects. But it is a subject of importance to the many thousands of Americans who have had property either seized or recovered by the FBI and certainly of importance to the general and efficient operation of the FBI and our court systems.

And as I suppose could be surmised by any Member of this body, the auditors found that the FBI needs to strengthen their management of their property system. Not an earth-shattering finding, but one of importance to those of us who believe constant and aggressive oversight will lead to a more efficient and less costly Government.

But what was in the nine pages denied to me by the Department of Justice after months of deliberation and two written requests? I do not suppose I would have ever found out if it had not been for what I suspect was the conscious of a dedicated public servant who anonymously provided me with the deleted pages.

I ask that these pages be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The pages follow:

CONDITIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS, MANAGEMENT RESPONSES, AND INTERNAL AUDIT STAFF COMMENTS

I. AGENCY COOPERATION

In general, FBI Headquarters liaison and field offices visited in this audit proved to be less than fully cooperative. In part, we attribute this to the failure of Headquarters to provide the field offices with information as to our role and the level of cooperation expected. Also, the conduct of the audit was affected by the fact that, in a field division, the Special Agent in Charge (SAC) has a great deal of autonomy and can limit the extent of cooperation with instructions received from Headquarters.

On numerous occasions throughout this review we attempted telephonic contact with our designated liaison agent. Rarely did we make immediate contact. Usually we were informed he had "stepped out," and would call back. Seldom was our call returned. We understand this was often due to an additional assignment which required him to absent himself from the office, sometimes for extended periods. However, this seriously affected his role as our liaison and caused unnecessary delays in the audit.

We also, as soon as practicable, provided our liaison with memoranda showing our planned field visits, the probable times of our visits and duration of our stay so the field sites could be informed. We also forwarded a memorandum designating those records to which access would be needed. While we note that those field divisions we proposed to visit were usually apprised of our coming, in no case were we given access to all the records we had identified and we have serious doubts that the field had been instructed to make them available. In our opinion, a liaison officer should be generally available, prompt in returning calls, and make every effort to provide the maximum level of cooperation. We do not now have such a liaison.

We also noted that field offices were apparently unaware that we were visiting as duly delegted representatives of the Attorney General serving under appropriate clearance levels and carrying out his mandates.

Title 28, Code of Federal Regulations states:

"§ 0.75 Policy functions. The Assistant Attorney General for Administration shall head the Justice Management Division and shall provide advice relating to basic Department policy for budget, financial management, auditing, personnel management and training, automatic data processing and telecommunications, security and for all matters pertaining to organization, management, and administration. Subject to the general supervision of the Attorney General and under the direction of the Associate Attorney General, the following described matters are assigned to, and shall be conducted, handled, or supervised by, the Assistant Attorney General for Administration:

"(h) Supervise and direct independent and comprehensive internal audits, including examinations authorized by 28 U.S.C. 526, of all organizations, programs, and functions of the Department to assure that the programs and functions of the Department are being carried out efficiently and economically."

Pursuant to these authorities the Assistant Attorney General for Administration issued and approved DOJ Order 2900.1C, dated March 24, 1980, delegating to the Director, Internal Audit Staff, the responsibility for carrying out internal audits in DOJ organizations.

In no FBI office were we accorded the freedom of movement and access to records that our status warranted. For example:

In Philadelphia, we were told at the outset that we would be denied access to Grand Jury material and investigative files. We were assigned an agent supervisor to assist us in any file review and serve as liaison. Although we were not so instructed, it was tacitly understood that we were expected to stay in our work area and the Bulky Exhibit Room. On one occasion, a request for information from a file was flatly refused as was a request for access to so-called "work box" rooms where we had reason to believe we would find unrecorded seized property.

In San Francisco, we were assigned a work area adjacent to the bulky exhibits clerk and were escorted by her wherever necessary within the office as well as from the reception area to the work site in the morning, at lunch, and back in the evening. When we sought information from the files it took two special agents to assist us in locating the information we needed.

Detroit was also uncooperative. We were assigned an inteview room off the reception area for a work area and an agent for liaison. We were escorted everywhere we went, including to the rest room, and as usual, routinely denied access to investigative files. There was even an initial denial of the local Federal Telecommunication System incoming number later rectified by our liaison but the denial was unwarranted because there is nothing secret about these numbers.

We asked to see some vehicles which that office had acquired to determine if they were properly stored and appropriate documentation was present. Personnel flatly refused to let us visit the storage site (a military post), on the grounds that there were sensitive materials stored there. We were also unable to review more than 600 bulky exhibit records on the grounds that they too were sensitive. The issue of sensitivity was, in our opinion, used as a method to prevent our effectively carrying out our assignment.

In Dallas we were permitted to move freely within the office and our liaison, the SAC, and Assistant Special Agent in charge (ASAC) were helpful. Again, though, we were denied access to investigative files and, as a result, tied up our agent liaison for the better part of a day researching the information we needed.

At Los Angeles, the pattern was the same. Access to investigative files was denied and where information from the file was needed an agent was designated to assist which interfered with the performance of the regular duties of the agent.

In the Atlanta Office we were well received. We were provided full cooperation by all personnel in that office and had access, after careful screening by the appointed liaison, to investigative case files which facilitated effective accomplishment of our mission.

The conduct of this audit has been hampered and made more costly by the general lack of cooperation. Not only was it necessary to devote more man days to the audit effort while waiting for return of telephone calls, or for files to be searched out and reviewed, but the removal of agents from their investigative duties to perform work which we could have done was costly to the FBI. Moreover, these agents, working with investigative files with which they were unfamiliar, all too often could not locate information which adequately answered the question we asked.

We have been carrying out audits in FBI under the terms of an agreement between the former Director and the Assistant Attorney General for Administration signed October 14, 1976. Contained in this agreement is the following:

The names of all informants, confidential sources, and other appropriate individuals will be excised from all FBI documents provided OMF. Additionally, if information obtained in certain instances would identify the informant, the FBI and OMF staff will discuss the matter and work out a procedure so such information is not presented in a way that could result in identifying the informant.

The field offices visited opted to deny us access to the files rather than carry out the procedures provided by the agreement. The option exercised did not facilitate our carrying out the audit.

The secretive attitude of the FBI toward its investigative files is, on our opinion, unwarranted. With the possible exceptions of Grand Jury material and informant names, (which should, in our opinion, be coded into the file) there should be nothing so unique or different with respect to FBI investigations, as to justify this attitude which proves costly both to us and to them. Accordingly, we include here certain recommendations to rectify this situation.

* * * * *

Prior to issuance of this draft report, the Supervisory Auditor addressed a memorandum to our liaison requesting that a close-out conference with appropriate FBI personnel be arranged. The memorandum also contained the suggestion that the report be reviewed for sensitive information and any concerns raised at the conference. Copies of a draft report indicating the report was for discussion purposes were also furnished.

The liaison officer telephonically informed the Supervisory Auditor that he would not arrange the requested conference nor route the drafts for sensitivity review because they had not been transmitted by the Director and because the FBI considered the draft report furnished a final draft.

The purpose of the requested conference was to provide FBI with an informal opportunity to comment on the possible report and raise any concerns as to content, recommendations, and sensitivity. Our regular practice is to hold close-out conferences with auditees before the final draft report is issued. With respect to the issue of sensitive matters, the requested conference could have addressed them as weil. The agreement with FBI provides that we will give FBI an opportunity to review draft reports for sensitive information but does not stipulate who shall provide the draft submission. We consider this another instance of the obstructionist tactics regularly used by FBI in their dealings with IAS.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Director should:

1. Order that all FBI Divisions provide the Audit Staff with unrestricted access to their offices, personnel, equipment, and all records of whatever type and wherever situated in accordance with the terms of the 1976 agreement.

2. Establish a readily available liaison point at an organizational level high enough to facilitate in every possible way audits initiated by this Staff.

Mr. BAUCUS. For my colleagues who take the time to review these pages, they will find than during the course of the audit, the FBI was "less than fully cooperative." The FBI apparently used every opportunity to delay or hinder the auditors. The FBI actions ranged from annoying—not returning phone calls promptly—to the more serious—denial of access to needed records. The auditors concluded:

The conduct of this audit has been hampered and made more costly by the general lack of cooperation . . . . We consider this another instance of the obstructionist tactics regularly used by FBI in their dealings with IAS (Internal Audit Staff.)

Mr. President, I find this situation intolerable. On the one hand you have the Assistant Attorney General for Administration stating that the release of the deleted pages would "undermine the willingness of auditees to be candid and forthright with the auditors" and on the other hand you have those very same pages detailing the lack of candor and forthrightness of the FBI.

We have a problem here. Not only have I been hindered in performing my oversight duties as a member of the Judiciary Committee, but the taxpayer has had to shell out additional tax dollars to pay for what appears to be an institutional refusal to cooperate.

Has the situation been corrected? I suspect not, but who knows for sure? Certainly if the Department of Justice had had its way, we would never have known a problem existed.

I have brought this entire matter to the attention of the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee and have asked them to review the matter at public hearings at their earliest convience. It is evident that this body should at long last consider legislation that would elevate the audit staff within the Department of Justice to a position of direct supervision by the Attorney General. During the 96th Congress, I introduced legislation that would have established an Office of Professional Responsibility and Audit under the Attorney General. I did so with the belief that the Department of Justice and the American people would best be served by a permanent, independent and respected investigative and audit office similar to Inspector General offices in other agencies.

It now appears that we need this office more than ever. At a time of severe budget constraints, we cannot afford costly institutional badgerings. Auditors in the Department of Justice, as well as throughout the Government, perform on a daily basis service that leads to more efficient Government. Yet to do their work, auditors need the clout to overcome obstructionist tactics. Evidently such is not the case with the Department of Justice and the FBI.

Finally Mr. President, I have received an advance copy of the August 21, 1982, issue of Washington Merry-Go-Round written by Columnist Jack Anderson in which Mr. Anderson discusses this same matter. I believe his insight into this situation is most revealing and ask that his column be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The column follows:

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

EMBARRASSING REPORT LEADS TO JUSTICE-FBI STONEWALLING

(By Jack Anderson)

WASHINGTON.—Like most presidents before him, Ronald Reagan has tried to draw a curtain of secrecy between the government's internal operations and the outside world. He doesn't want the acts and policies of his administration to reach the people through what he considers the distorting prism of the press.

Some of his subalterns have carried the coverup to a ludicrous degree. Perhaps the most celebrated example was Interior Secretary James Watt's claim of "executive privilege" for some documents of surpassing unimportance that a House committee wanted to see. Under threat of a contempt citation, Watt finally turned them over; they turned out to be hardly worth hiding.

Now the Justice Department has tried to stonewall requests for seven pages of an internal audit report that is mildly embarrassing to the FBI. The department refused a Freedom of Information Act request from my associate Tony Capaccio. The reason: "To protect the decision-making processes of the government," explained Justice official Kevin D. Rooney.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., was similarly rebuffed. He noticed seven pages missing from the Justice Department report and asked for them. The department turned him down, explaining that the pages were deleted "as a result of a sensitivity review with the FBI."

As part of a "working draft," the Justice Department told Baucus, release of the pages "could be detrimental to the necessary, appropriate and candid communications that must take place" in the course of a government audit. In other words, the department was trying to add auditor-bureaucrat to the sanctified relationships of lawyer-client, doctor-patient, priest-confessor and president-adviser.

I have now obtained the seven missing pages by other means. What was the material that was important enough to cause the Justice Department to defy a United States senator and invoke a loophole in the Freedom of Information Act?

Simply this: Rooney had written to FBI Director William Webster that "the auditors reported that the FBI was generally less than cooperative," and added: "The draft audit report was prepared with this cooperation problem as the first finding."

In a nutshell, the FBI had given the auditors a hard time, and the auditors were miffed. The republic apparently would be in peril if Congress and the American people learned that government employees don't always get along.

The purpose of the audit was to check the efficiency, or lack of same, in the performance of what is probably the most boring task FBI agents ever get stuck with: the handling of confiscated property for use as evidence in prosecutions.

Maybe the G-men thought the chore was bad enough, without having efficiency experts from Washington second-guessing them. At any rate, the auditors reported huffily:

"In general, FBI headquarters liaison and field offices visited in this audit proved to be less than fully cooperative. In no FBI offices were we accorded the freedom of movement and access to records that our status warranted."

This lack of respect to the Rodney Dangerfields of the audit branch was manifested in Philadelphia, San Francisco, Detroit and Los Angeles. In Detroit, the investigators were "unable to review more than 600 bulky exhibit records on the grounds that they were too sensitive."

The auditors concluded darkly: "The issue of sensitivity was, in our opinion, used as a method to prevent our effectively carrying out our assignment. We consider this another instance of the obstructionist tactics regularly used by the FBI in their dealings with internal audit staff."

This was the teapot tempest the Justice Department insists is too sensitive for the public to learn about.

Footnote: Baucus now plans to insert the seven deleted pages in the Congressional Record to demonstrate just how silly the bureaucrats' claim of privilege is.●

SOVIET DAY OF SHAME

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on August 21, many people throughout the world, and particularly Americans of Czech and Slovak descent, will mark the Soviet day of shame, the day in 1968 when the Soviet Union sent troops in a brutal invasion of Czechoslovakia, crushing the reform minded government of Alexander Dubcek. Dubcek's liberal regime had been trying to introduce a humane and progressive element into the Communist way of life, the first major deviation from Iron Curtain rule since the Hungarian rebellion in 1956. This cruel act of aggression, in direct contravention to the United Nations Charter, was provoked by a movement to liberalize and democratize Czechoslovakia—to institute socialism with a human face.

The invasion of Czechoslovakia was the prototype of a Russian policy later called the Brezhnev doctrine, which seeks to justify Soviet military intervention whenever and wherever the interest of socialism, as defined by the Kremlin ideologues, are threatened. The fact that the people of Czechoslovakia were enjoying a period of relative freedom and, even more significantly, prospering under its influence, was an intolerable affront to the basic philosophy of the Soviet rulers.

The attempt by the Czechoslovak people to humanize the Communist system was clearly an internal matter. The Soviet infringement upon the rights of a sovereign country was an obvious violation of the recognized rights of self determination and nonintervention in the domestic affairs of an independent state. The continued presence of Soviet troops serves as a testament to the Soviet Union's contempt for international agreements and universally acknowledged principles. However, the presence of these troops is even more revealing in that it shows us how the Soviet Union is forced to use its military might to continue its domination of Czechoslovakia, Poland, and other nations when the system of communism has all too obviously failed.

STILL YEARNING FOR FREEDOM

Soviet control has failed to extinguish the yearning for freedom among the people. In 1977, more than 1,000 Czechoslovak citizens from all walks of life signed Charter '77, petitioning their Government to honor its commitments under the Helsinki Final Act, signed by Czechoslovakia, the United States, the Soviet Union and 32 other European nations in 1975 and which guaranteed basic human rights. Now, in strict adherence with the wishes of the Soviet ruling elite, the Czechoslovak Government, unwilling to accept the legitimacy of this movement, has detained, imprisoned, and otherwise persecuted its members. The authorities continue, as well, to curtail the activities of the Catholic church, and have even arrested or imprisoned several members of the clergy in the past few years. Intellectuals and dissidents protesting oppression and discrimination have been harassed, persecuted, or imprisoned.

The Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, on which I serve as cochairman, will continue to raise the issue of Soviet and Czechoslovak noncompliance with the Helsinki Final Act. Both the Soviet and Czechoslovak Government must be made aware that the world watches to see how they comply with their obligations under the Helsinki accords, and what this will mean for future strategic agreements. These governments must start respecting the sovereign rights of nations and the human rights of citizens living within their own borders, and complying with international agreements they have pledged to honor.

I would like to note, Mr. President, that the Commission has recently published a book entitled "Human Rights in Czechoslovakia: the Documents of Charter '77 (1977-1982)." the documents in this publication reflect the efforts of Czechoslovak citizens to express their views on rights guaranteed to them under Czechoslovak law, the Helsinki Final Act, and other international agreements.

It is essential that we encourage the Czechoslovak people in their quest for sovereignty and their efforts to secure basic rights. We must do this both in word and in deed. Continuing support for human rights, combined with our determination to remain strong and resolute, represents the most meaningful action we can undertake.●

NATIONAL SERVICE: AN ISSUE OF IMPORTANCE

● Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues a speech on national service delivered by the Reverend William J. Byron, president of the University of Scranton, at the May 23, 1982, commencement of Anna Maria College in Paxton, Mass.

Father Byron's address is a thoughtful, eloquent, and penetrating analysis of the lack of purpose felt by many young Americans today. His recommendations on national service are well-stated and raise important issues. I have long advocated a program of voluntary national service, and I find Father Byron's remarks to be of great interest. While I do not favor a mandatory national service program as suggested by Father Byron, I believe that his insights enrich the debates on this important issue.

Mr. President, I ask that Father Byron's speech be printed in the RECORD.

ADDRESS BY WILLIAM J. BYRON, S.J.

It is a privilege to have the opportunity to come to Massachusetts, a State where ideas are generated and exchanged more readily than in most other parts of our nation, and share an idea with the graduating sons and daughters of Anna Maria. This college serves both the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the nation by cultivating an appetite for ideas in those who come here to teach and learn. The teaching-learning transaction began here in 1946. It continues today with the evident life and vigor represented in this assembly. And it will prosper into an uncertain future so long as ideas continue to be taken seriously by competent parties to the teaching-learning transaction whose dedication and spirit of sacrifice remain sufficiently strong to forge the bonds that hold this academic community together.

I said I have an idea to share with you. It is not particularly original, nor lofty, nor new. Its is an idea that has engaged the interest of your junior senator from Massachusetts, Paul Tsongas, who has encouraged its discussion in our national Congress. It is the idea of national service. I want to discuss it with you now in the context of what I will refer to as drift and the draft—the drift of purposelessness besetting so many of our young, and the military draft for which our young men are now required to register.

When I first thought about becoming a Jesuit. I had to think as well about the military draft. It was just two years before the founding of Anna Maria. I was a senior in high school. I was quite uncertain about what I wanted to do in life. My situation was not exactly one of purposelessness, but I was not clear, in those late teenage years, about which of several purposes I wanted to pursue. The immediate decision was made for me by the military draft. It put me into uniform, opened up an interesting range of developmental experiences, sent me overseas to Germany, and returned me home in 1946 just a little older, considerably more mature, and anxious to take advantage of the educational benefits included in the G.I. Bill of Rights.

After three years of college, I had a much clearer sense of purpose. Subject then to neither drift nor draft, I decided to join the Jesuits. It was a free choice, a mature choice, made after careful consideration of the alternatives. I had a sense of purpose strong enough to overcome the doubts and ambiguities that surround any serious human choice into an unknown future.

The point of this brief autobiographic excursion is to set the stage for a discussion of two urgent contemporary issues. The first is the problem of purposelessness in America, particularly as it affects the young. The second is the potential remedy for the problem of purposelessness implied in a program of national service.

I think the U.S. is now in a state of national emergency. It is not a military emergency. I do not define it in terms of the presence of an external enemy. The enemy resides within. Specifically, it lies within the youth of the nation. It is a crisis of purposelessness. It is evident on inner-city street corners, in the youth unemployment rates, in the problems of drug abuse, vandalism, violence and crime. It resides in the suburbs as well, and populates our college campuses too. Several weeks ago, a psychiatrist remarked to me that he is seeing an epidemic growth of depression and suicide in adolescents.

The affluent young are not immune to drift. Alienation from their families and themselves may run deeper in the privileged young than does purposelessness in the poor who are trying to climb higher on the economic ladder.

It has been said that failure to plan means planning to fail. Absence of purpose encourages failure to plan which, in turn, contributes to the further diminution of purpose. In the wake of purposelessness, angry frustrations rise for awhile then dissolve into drift and destructive dependencies.

Four decades ago, "Remember Pearl Harbor" echoed back and forth across the nation as a call to arms. Today, we have no rallying cry, no focal point, no central project. But we do have a crisis.

Perhaps Chicago '68 and Woodstock '69 sent up the first signals that a new emergency was taking on national proportions. Was the "first shot" the one fired at Kent State in 1970? Both shots and shocks emanating from Jonestown in 1979 unsettled the nation but not sufficiently to bring us to a realization that we have a crisis on our hands. We remain unmoved, without the will to declare a war on purposelessness.

Lesser known events—personal tragedies which crippled the emotional development or shortened the lives of many of our young—have found their way into countless family histories. But American families have not yet come to a consensus that there is present in the nation a crisis of purposelessness episodically evident in bursts of violence, organized outrage, individual and communal withdrawal, self-denigration and self-destruction. There at the crossroads of our crisis are our generally well-educated but undisciplined young, most of them quite healthy, many relatively well off. Virtually all of them are "unnecessary" on the production side of our economy (they are in school or unemployed drop-outs, in the main), but they are quite active and "necessary" for the vitality of the consumption side of our economy. They constitute the largest collection of unemployed consumers in the world. And I think they resent it, deep down. They would prefer being on their own to being on the dole, even though the dole is from the family. Where are they going? What are they going to do? Many of them just don't know. Too many don't care. You, the purposeful young (and not so young) graduates of Anna Maria, are going to have to address yourselves to their problem since their problem is developing into a crisis for your nation.

Whenever goals are unclear, anxieties abound. Our youngsters are anxious. They are not simply uneasy and unclear about which of several purposes they might pursue; many see no purpose at all in their lives. They have no goals. They are fatalistic about the future.

If the nation were to compel all 18 year olds, both the purposeless and the purposeful, to devote a year or two of their young adulthood to meeting, in some organized way, unattended human needs at home and abroad, it is just possible that the purposeless might find direction for their lives and the purposeful might gain further maturity without intolerable delay or deflection from their intended goals. What are these unattended or, at least, unmet human needs? World hunger, neglect of the elderly, the decay of U.S. cities, widespread disease and illiteracy in the developing countries, day-care and child-care needs. We also have an urgent need for conservation and environmental protection. The list of needs is endless. And we suffer from a shortage of both will and skill to meet these needs.

In cataloguing the needs, I am not arguing that they constitute a national emergency. I am suggesting that widespread purposelessness among our young is a fact of sufficient proportions to constitute a national emergency. I am also prepared to suggest that this emergency might be addressed by enlisting our young in national service that goes far beyond a military draft. To the extent that preparedness and national defense require military manpower, the military option would remain one form of national service open to those called up by the draft. To the extent that draftees objected in conscience to military involvement, their service would be directed toward nonmilitary national needs.

In the service scenario I am sketching here, all 18-year-olds, male and female, would be subject to the draft. If this raises several constitutional questions, let them be settled by the Supreme Court. If conscientious objection to enforced service of any kind emerges, provision would have to be made that would respect freedom of conscience. Compulsory national service plainly involves the use of force. Since any use of force poses a threat to the rule of reason, only a true national emergency can justify compulsion of service for the common good. In my judgment, such an emergency exists today. I realize, however, that there is no national consensus, no "Remember Pearl Harbor," in support of my position.

Nor do we have a socio-psychological index calibrated to measure rising or falling degrees of purposelessness in so many of our young whom we view more wishfully than wisely as our hope for the future. Moreover, there is no organization, governmental or private, sufficiently well-organized to manage a system of national service. We have no mechanism capable of channeling productive young energies into meaningful contact with national needs and a wider range of human needs.

Should the sponsorship and management of full national service be a federal responsibility exclusively? Or should it be shared with states, counties, cities and, indeed, with the private sector as well? Private sector participation, in my view, would be essential. Such participation could range from the provision of apprenticeship and training opportunities for draftees to transportation and recreation benefits for all service men and women. The private sector could also provide actual employment, at national service rates of pay, in service-rendering jobs.

Without a national consensus in support of my position, I have to conclude that voluntary, not compulsory national service, ought to be discussed, encouraged and even attempted now. It would be useful, I think, if the nation's political leadership began taking this issue seriously. Unattended purposelessness can have nothing but bad consequences for the nation.

My argument falls apart, of course, if there is in fact more purpose than drift in the nation's young. Anyone willing to assert the preponderance of purpose and the relative insignificance of drift among the young has to manage a fairly substantial burden of proof. On both sides of the question there is a dearth of data. We are also virtually without tools for measurement of the problem.

The prospect of compulsory national service raises hopes and fears, often in the same persons. When I wear my university president's cap and speak of national service, I have to be careful about a potential conflict of interest. Such a program would probably carry with it a post-service G.I. Bill-type of educational benefit. College administrators worried about rising costs, shrinking enrollments and vanishing student-aid funds would find this feature of a national service program immensely attractive. I share their enthusiasm on those understandable self-interested grounds. As a citizen, I share a concern voiced by those who fear that a system of registration and draft for national service will be abused by a government capable of using its war powers unwisely, even immorally, I further fear the possibility of an executive order which would mobilize for military training everyone on the national service register. Presidential power has been abused before; it could convert national service into an entrapment device to bring not only the unsuspecting but the conscientiously unwilling into the military manpower pool. Safeguards against that kind of abuse would have to be guaranteed before a national service program would have my full support. And finally, the notion of compulsion—the use of force—carries with it the caveat that it could provoke a resentful, counterproductive response from the young people I want most to help.

As one who benefitted from a service opportunity at age 18 and received a free college education as a result, I look at today's young and can't help but wonder whether they and their nation would not be better off if we had a new idea of national service. If it is going to work, it will exact opportunity costs from the better educated, better motivated young and financial outlays from an already strained Federal Treasury. On the benefit side, I would expect to see a significant strengthening of personal and national purpose along with a measurable reduction of some vexing social needs.

Well, that's the idea I wanted to share with you. Not a particularly great idea, nor is it altogether new. And perhaps its time has not yet come. But think about it.

You have purpose; pursue it now with confidence. You have enormous potential just waiting to be released. And you have the power that only knowledge can provide. Use it to help your nation to halt a harmful drift among others in your generation less fortunate, but no less valuable as persons, than yourselves.●

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO COL. JOE MONTGOMERY

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I would like to pay special tribute to one of my constituents, Col. Joe Montgomery, who will be celebrating a unique milestone, his 106th birthday, on August 23.

Born in Iowa in 1876, Colonel Joe has shared in the growth of the Nation and has added much to the spirit and character of Montana and the West. He has run a stagecoach line of 500 head of horses, politicked with the Rankins, and fought with Teddy Roosevelt in the Spanish American War. He knew all the first families of Montana, knew the Custer family, and remembers the Nex Perce and Gros Ventre, the Sioux and Blackfoot, the bear and buffalo of days long gone.

Claudia Brownlee has written a book of Colonel Joe's stories, called "Colonel Joe, The Last of the Rough Riders," and it is well worth reading. I know that I have enjoyed them, and I know that our future generations will appreciate the chance to see into a way of life that is such a colorful part of our heritage.

DR. RICHARD HALVERSON, SENATE CHAPLAIN

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, it is true for me, as I am sure it is for each one in this Chamber, that there is one person in my experience who always speaks directly to my need and gives my spirit a lift. As long as I have been in this city, our Chaplain, Dr. Richard Halverson, has been that person in my life.

Senators may not be aware that he was proclaimed by the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., as the Minister of the Year. In this capacity, he delivered a remarkable sermon in the National Presbyterian Church on Sunday, May 16, 1982. This message, "The Man, Christ Jesus," is an outstanding statement on the historic nature of Christ and His continuing impact on our lives as individuals and a nation.

Because we do not often have the opportunity to hear Dr. Halverson preach and to know more fully his heart on different subjects of concern to all Americans, I take this opportunity to make this truly compelling document available.

Mr. President, I ask that the full text of Dr. Halverson's sermon be printed in the RECORD.

The sermon follows:

THE MAN, CHRIST JESUS

(By Dr. Richard C. Halverson, Chaplain, U.S. Senate)

At the time when President Kennedy and Khrushchev were in confrontation over Cuba, I was scheduled for a retreat in a ranch near Yellowstone Park. In Billings I was met at the airport by a friend, City Attorney Willis Jones, who had the reputation of being very enthusiastic for President Kennedy. After the amenities, I said to Willis, "How would you like to be in the White House right now?" Expecting him to say, there's no place that I'd rather not be, to my amazement he said, "I'd like to be in the White House right now!" We picked up my baggage and started for the ranch. "Willis", I asked, "why would you like to be in the White House right now?" He said, "Because that's where history is being made."

After a moment, I asked, "Willis, who do you remember from the first century?" He did not respond immediately so I continued. "Can you remember the name of a Roman emperor from the first century?" He knew he was called Caesar, but he couldn't remember a name. So I said, "Rome had a very powerful senate in those days, can you name any of the Roman senators?" He couldn't. "How about the Greek city fathers in Athens? He couldn't remember any. "Who do you remember, Willis?" "I remember Jesus." "You remember a Jewish carpenter, who at thirty years of age became an itinerant rabbi". "Who else do you remember?" "I remember Pilate". "Why Pilate?" "Because he tried Jesus.". "Who else?" "James and John". "Who were they?" "Fishermen", and so on. After 2,000 years of empire builders, empires and civilizations the one remembered is Jesus . . . except for those who were influnced by his life in one way or another.

Consider this: Jesus, virtually unnoticed by the important and powerful of his day as well as the historians. He began with twelve men; spent three years with them; and generated a movement which has reached the whole world . . . numbers into the hundreds of millions and today, 2,000 years later, is going stronger than ever. Can you think of anything equivalent in human history?

He was a man, but what a man!

How do you explain this man; unnoticed by his contemporaries—remembered by the whole earth 2,000 years later? He confounded those around him. You will recall one occasion. He was in a boat on the Sea of Galilee with his desciples, most of whom were seasoned fishermen who knew those waters like the palms of their hands. A great storm came up suddenly, as it often does on the Sea of Galilee, and the fishermen were terrified. Jesus was asleep. In their fear they awakened him, rebuked him and said, "Don't you care that we are perishing?" The record reports, "Jesus rose, rebuked the winds, and the waves. The storm subsided and there was a great calm. The record indicates that the men were amazed . . ." They marvelled and said, "What sort of man is this that even the wind and sea obey him?" When he was teaching in his hometown synagogue according to the record "They were astonished and said, 'Where does this man get his wisdon and these mighty works?'" The apostle, John, reports that the "Jews marvelled saying, 'How is it that this man has such learning when he has never studied?'" An when the officers refused to arrest Jesus and were explaining their failure, they said, "Never a man spoke like this man." What an explanation for failing to make an arrest!

Peter, in his sermon on the Day of Pentecost, declared, "Men of Israel, hear these words. Jesus of Nazareth, a man attested to you by God with mighty works and wonders and signs which God has done through him in your midst, as you yourselves know . . . this same Jesus delivered up according to the definite plan and foreknowledge of God, you crucified and killed by the hands of lawless men." Paul said, "For there is one God and on mediator between God and man . . . the man, Christ Jesus."

How do you explain this man? His credentials are interesting. He is in his hometown synagogue in Nazareth. The Scriptures are brought to him. He opens them to the 61st chapter of Isaiah and reads: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me because he has annointed me to preach good news to the poor; he has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and the recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty those who are oppressed; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." He closed the book. It was taken from him. He sat down and to the astonishment of his hometown people, he said, "Today, this Scripture is fulfilled." Now, think about this. This man Jesus, the carpenter, this traveling rabbi said to his hometown people, "This prophecy which Isaiah wrote 700 years ago, I fulfill today."

His credentials were amazing! Think about his teaching. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus says something very significant in Matthew 5. He says, "Think not that I have come to abolish the law and the prophets. I have come not to abolish, but to fulfill them, for truly I say to you 'til Heaven and earth pass away . . . not an iota or a dot will pass from the law until all is accomplished." This man, Jesus, had profound respect for the law of Moses and yet as He continued teaching, he said over and over again . . . Verse 21 of Matthew 5, "You have heard that it was said to the men of old, but I say; Verse 27, "You have heard that it was said, but I say"; Verse 31, "It was also said, but I say"; Verse 33, "Again you have heard that it was said to the men of old, but I say"; Verse 38, "You have heard that it was said, but I say"; Verse 41, "You have heard that it was said, but I say." To paraphrase, this is what Jesus said, "Not one jot or tittle of the law of Moses shall pass until all is accomplished" and you have heard what the law of Moses said, but now I say, and he spoke words that transcended the law of Moses.

The record says that when Jesus finished these sayings, the crowds were astonished at his teaching, for he taught them as one who had authority . . . not as a scribe.

Consider his self-awareness. Who did he think he was? What did he think about himself? In Matthew 16, Jesus says to the disciples, "Whom do men say that the Son of Man is?" and a little later when they have answered that question and he asked, "Who do you say that I am?" He is identifying himself with the Son of Man—which was an Old Testament concept of the one who should come to fulfill a promise made to Abraham 2,000 years before. Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ (the Messiah) the Son of the Living God." Jesus accepted the identity and commends Peter for his remarks, "Blessed are you Simon Bar-Jona," you have not discovered this by a logical or rational process, this has been revealed to you by my Father in Heaven, following which makes this amazing claim: "I will build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. "The powers of death shall not defeat it."

In the first chapter of Genesis, we read these words, "In the beginning, God", in the third chapter of Genesis, we read these words, "Now the serpent, Satan." In those three chapters; in those two statements; seven words; we are introduced to the cosmic conflict in history: the conflict between truth and error—between light and darkness—between order and chaos—between God and Satan. Whether it be the conflict between a man and his wife; or a parent and a child; or neighbor with neighbor or friend with friend, or management with labor or black with white; or nation with nation—every conflict derives from this transcendent conflict and Satan has won conflict after conflict after conflict in human history. Now Jesus says, "This one I am going to win" . . . and He will and He is! Notice also the remarkable authority He transmits: "I, Jesus, the Jewish rabbi, the carpenter, I give to you the keys to the Kingdom. Whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in Heaven; whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in Heaven."

The Jews had profound respect for the Sabbath. They wanted to stone Jesus for breaking it. He responded by saying, "I am the Lord of the Sabbath."

He said that obedience to his word constituted the entrance into the Kingdom and the only secure foundation for building a life. At the end of the Sermon on the Mount he said, "Not everyone who says unto me, 'Lord, Lord' shall enter the Kingdom of Heaven, but he who does the will of my Father which is in Heaven", by which he is equating what he has just taught in the Sermon on the Mount with the will of the Father in Heaven. "In that day, Many will say unto me 'Lord, Lord did we not do many wonderful works in your name? We prophesied in your name, we cast out demons in your name'. I will say to them 'Depart from me you evildoers, I never knew you.'" Then he goes on to say, "He that hears my sayings and does them is a wise man that builds his house upon the rock and the rain falls and the winds blow and the floods come and beat against that house and it does not fall because it was founded upon a rock. He that hears my sayings and does not do them is a foolish man who builds his house on the sand and the rain falls, and the winds blow and floods come and beat against that house and great is its ruin." This amazing man, Jesus, the Jewish carpenter and rabbi, said, "Obeying me is the only sure foundation for life."

John reports that Jesus said, "If anyone keeps my words, he will never see death," He said that he had power over life and death as far as he was concerned. "No one takes my life from me; I lay it down of myself; I take it up again. I have the power to lay it down and I have the power to take it up again." He said that he was going to be crucified and rise again from the dead. "This generation seeks a sign, there shall one sign be given it, the sign of the prophet, Jonah. As Jonah was three days in the belly of the fish; so will the Son of Man be three days in the heart of the earth. He said, when they brought to him the paralyzed man let down through the roof, "Thy sins be forgiven thee." They said to him, "Only God can forgive sin." He said, "Whether it is easier to say to this man 'take up thy bed and walk' or 'thy sins be forgiven'—you decide, but know this, I have the power to forgive sin."

But most of all, His incredible "I ams". Jesus Christ was the incarnation of virtue—the supreme manifestation of humility, yet he used the personal pronoun "I" continually and connected with it, absolutely incredible claims concerning himself! Take any of these claims, put them on the lips of the greatest person you can remember and they are simply unbelievable. For example, imagine Abraham Lincoln saying, "I am the light of the world." Jesus said, he was! He said "I am the living bread which came from Heaven, if anyone eats of this bread he will live forever." Jesus said, "I am the bread of life, he who comes to me shall not hunger and he who believes in me shall never thirst." Jesus said, "You are from below, I am from above. You are of this world I am not of this world." Jesus said, "I am the door." Jesus said, "I am the good shepherd." Put that in the context of the twenty-third Psalm, "The Lord is my shepherd . . .". Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believes in me, though he were dead, (though one has already died, which would include Abraham and Noah and Adam and Eve) whosoever believes in me, even though he has already died, shall live again and whoever lives and believes in me shall never die." He said, "You call me teacher and Lord and you say right, for so I am." He said, "I am the way, the truth and the light. No one comes to the Father but by me." He said, "I am the true vine."

But the supreme statement came in another encounter with the pharisees, when Jesus said, "Abraham rejoices to see my day." They said, "You are not yet 50 years old and Abraham has been dead for 2,000 years." Jesus answered, "Before Abraham was, I am." The record says they took up stones to stone him for blasphemy. "I am" was the sacred name for God and a devout Jew would not think of pronouncing it. It was given to Moses when he said to God on Mount Sinai, "Who shall I say is sending me when I go to get the people of Israel out of Egypt?" And God said, "I Am that I Am. Tell them I AM hath sent thee." That is Yahweh in Hebrew, and would never be pronounced by a devout Jew. Now Jesus says, "Before Abraham was I AM." And when they took up stones to stone him for blasphemy, he did not try to explain and say, "Wait a minute, you don't understand, I didn't mean that." No, he just disappeared. It was not yet his time.

When he was accused of blasphemy he never denied it. He accepted worship. Peter and Paul rejected worship but Jesus accepted worship. In fact, on Palm Sunday when the Pharisees told Jesus to rebuke his disciples for crying out "Blessed is the King who comes in the name of the Lord," Jesus said, "If these were silent the very stones would cry." This amazing man said, "If these people did not worship me today, inanimate life would recognize me as the Kings of Kings and the Lord of Lords". And when accused of being the King, he did not deny it.

What about this man? Was he insane? Was he pathological, an egomanic with a Messianic complex, or was he speaking the truth? C. S. Lewis writes: "Either this man Jesus was or is the son of God or else a mad man or something worse! You can shut him up for a fool; you can spit at him and kill him as a demon or you can fall at his feet and call him Lord and God. But let us not come with any patronizing nonsense about his being a great human teacher. He has not left that open to us, he did not intend to."

Charles Malik, who in the days when he was President of the General Assembly of the United Nations was known as the conscience of the world, calls Jesus Christ the hinge of history. Every time you date a letter you testify to his existence—1982 A.D. He divides history into B.C. and A.D.

One tactic of those who slimply will not believe in Jesus Christ, do not want to believe in Jesus Christ, and therefore look for some way to justify their refusal to believe in Him, is to discredit the gospel record. You can't trust gospel history.

Let me read a few quotations:

Dr. James P. Shotwell, formerly Professor of History at Columbia in his book, "History of History" which J. Wilbur Smith said was the most important work of his time in the English language wrote: "Luke, as the 'Acts of the Apostles' show, was an educated man who compiled his history out of various sources, was accurate in geography and painstaking in his work, stands easily along side the best pagan history of his time."

Dr. John A. Scott, Professor of Greek at Northwestern University for forty years, one of the great Greek scholars of his day said: "Luke was not only a doctor, and an historian, but he was one of the world's greatest men of letters. He wrote the clearest and the best Greek written in his century. Without Luke, we never could have had a report from a competent man of science on the birth of Jesus from a virgin. If Jesus had two human parents, why did this shrewd Gentile physician never suspect the fact? Since the arguments were sufficient to convince Dr. Luke, we know that we are dealing with no ignorant childish fancy."

The late Professor Edward Meyer, recognized in his day as the greatest authority on ancient history and not a professing Christian, says this of the gospel. "It is evident that for our history of Jesus we have by no means to reckon merely with representations of the records of the second sub-apostolic generation, but are taken back far behind that into the midst of the first generation. People who personally had known Jesus intimately and still preserved a lively recollection of him and these old recollections lie 'under our eyes in manifold form.' There is no ground at all for refusing to accept these oldest traditions as historically trustworthy in all essentials and in their chronological ordering of the history."

Rousseau, the famous unbeliever and rationalist of two centuries ago asked this question: "Shall we say that the Gospel story is a work of the imagination? Friends, that is not how one invents. The facts about Socrates, which no one doubts, are not so well attested as those about Jesus Christ. It would be more incredible that four men should have agreed to manufacture this book than that there was a single man who supplied the subject matter for it. No Jew could have hit upon its tone and morality. The Gospel has notes of reality which are so great—so striking—so absolutely inimitable that their inventor would be a more astonishing person than their hero."

The record can be trusted. Jesus really said those things about himself.

Will you consider this important fact, that through history, and as never before in our day, men and women, when they put their trust in Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord find their lives absolutely transformed by the power of his death and resurrection? Millions and millions and millions throughout human history of race and language and culture have been changed when they open their hearts to this amazing man! In this day, when our world so desperately languished for a leader who can be trusted, can you think of anybody more worthy of following, or trusting or of giving your life to? I invite you to give your life to this Man, this very God of very God, Jesus Christ, and follow him—eternally.

I want to close with a very familiar statement that so far as we know is anonymous:

"Here is a young man who was born in an obscure village, a child of a peasant woman; he grew up in another village; he worked in a carpenter's shop until he was thirty and then for three years he was an itinerant preacher. He never wrote a book; he never held an office; he never owned a home; he never had a family; he never went to college; he never put his foot inside a big city; he never traveled two hundred miles from the place where he was born; he never did any of the things that usually accompany greatness; he had no credentials, but himself.

"When he was still a young man the tide of public opinion turned against him; his friends ran away; he was turned over to his enemies; he went through the mockery of a trial; he was nailed to a cross between two thieves; while he was dying his executioners gambled for the only piece of property he had on earth—his coat. When he was dead he was laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend.

"Nineteen wide centuries have come and gone and today he is the central figure of the human race and the leader of the column of progress. I am far within the mark, when I say that all the armies that ever marched and all the navies that were ever built and all the parliaments that ever sat and all the kings that ever reigned put together—have not affected the life of one man upon this earth as has this one solitary life."

Ladies and gentleman, I commend to you, Jesus Christ, Lord! Amen.●

THE CRITICAL CONDITION OF THE TIMBER INDUSTRY

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee recently held hearings on S. 2805.

All of us from timber producing States recognize the critical condition of the timber industry, nationwide. While the diagnosis is clear, however, the remedy is not.

S. 2805 would authorize the Agriculture and Interior Secretaries to alter or terminate timber sales contracts with private companies that have been devasted by the depression in the housing industry.

There is no doubt that timber companies need relief from the hardships caused by high interest rates and the virtual standstill in timber sales. But S. 2805 is not the perfect vehicle for such aid.

For example, S. 2805 overlooks the effect of unrestricted timber contract termination on inland operators in States such as Montana. Montana businessmen view proposals like S. 2805 as a threat to their ability to maintain their share of an emaciated market. While S. 2805 may provide relief for west coast timber operators, its treatment of other regions is less fair.

The interests of timber companies outside the west coast must be taken into consideration. An estimated 80 percent of the benefits of S. 2805 potentially would go to the west coast. That means a greater share of the burden of the industry-wide depression would be shifted to inland businesses.

I do not know a single Montana businessman who wants timber companies in Washington or Oregon to be dragged down as a result of unrealistic contracts with the Forest Service. By the same token, however, equitable relief cannot include any provision that would flood the market with west coast timber and undercut operators in the interior regions and other sections of the country.

I commend my colleague, Senator McCLURE, chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, for introducing S. 2818. This bill provides significant relief for west coast operators by allowing the Interior and Agriculture secretaries to adjust the terms of pre-1982 contracts for a period of up to 5 years. In doing so, this measure would relieve the affected companies of any type of penalty or interest payment during the extension period.

S. 2818 also would ease the massive backlog of uncut timber into the marketplace rather than unleasing a flood of timber. In addition, the measure would allow administrative flexibility in adjusting these contracts, which is certainly desirable.

I hope that as a result of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearings, the committee will be able to draft a compromise measure. To be successful, any bill must address the very important concerns of timber operators but without any regional bias.●

PAY INCREASE FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this is the time of year when Government employees begin to look forward to a pay raise. Every October, whether they deserve it or not, Federal employees get a pay raise. Everyone gets the same raise, as a percentage of salary, regardless of merit. If you are a Federal employee, and you can hang on until October, you will get a raise, as sure as the sun will rise tomorrow.

Private sector workers should have it so good. But they do not. Many U.S. workers will not get a raise this year. In fact, a good number will actually take a pay cut for the first time. But Federal employees, protected by their unions and insulated from concerns for economy, will get theirs.

I know of not one single private sector employee who is entitled to an automatic pay increase every year. I know of not one single private sector employee who has a "COLA." But workers in the private sector are paying the raises of Government employees.

I recently received a letter from Mr. Steven B. McBrayer, of Spindale, N.C. Mr. McBrayer calls my attention to a recent publication by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which compares salaries and benefits of Federal employees with those of workers in the private sector. Mr. McBrayer points out that the average private sector worker in North Carolina earns 51 percent less than the average Federal employee. I am not surprised that he is shocked and enraged by this fact.

I have obtained a copy of the Chamber's publication, which is entitled, incidentally, "The Case for Freezing Federal Pay and Pensions." It also contains a number of other interesting facts. Are Senators aware, Mr. President, that civilian personnel costs will amount to an estimated 10.8 percent of this year's Federal budget? Do they know that the pay and pension expenses of present and retired Government employees cost more than the medicare and medicaid programs combined, and almost five times the amount spent on food stamps?

Are any of my colleagues aware of how the pay for the average private employee in their State compares with the average pay for Federal employees? These and other statistics are contained in the Chamber article, and I invite my colleagues to study them closely.

I ask that Mr. McBrayer's letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, followed by the Chamber article.

The material follows:

SPINDALE MILLS, INC.,
Spindale, N.C., August 4, 1982.

Hon. JESSE A. HELMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HELMS: I am very concerned about the state of our economy and the apparent unwillingness of Congress to balance the federal budget. We can wait no longer for a return to reasonable financial management of our country.

Recently the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America published a collection of data illustrating a comparison, by state, of federal government employees and private sector employees. The information is shocking and, frankly, sickening. In North Carolina we in the private sector earn 51.6% less than federal government employees on the average. This is ridiculous. But even more ridiculous is the fact that Congress continues to propose increases in federal salaries, benefits, and pensions, not to mention the "entitlement" programs. This must stop.

As a lifelong citizen of the State of North Carolina, I'm asking you as her representative to vote NO for any increase in federal expenditures, except military, until the budget is balanced. Also, please use your influence with other members of the Congress to cut expenditures and balance the budget.

Thank you for your concern and work for your state and country in Congress.

Sincerely yours,

STEPHEN B. MCBRAYER,

THE CASE FOR FREEZING FEDERAL PAY AND PENSIONS

[Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Economic Policy Division]

Federal pay for the more than 2 million civilian employees of the federal government will cost the U.S. taxpayers $58.7 billion this fiscal year. Combined with the $19.4 billion in pension and disability payments to former federal workers, civilian personnel costs will amount to an estimated 10.8 percent of this year's federal budget. These pay and pension expenses exceed the combined costs of the medicare and medicaid programs and are almost five times the amount spent on food stamps.

The Senate Budget Committee proposes that federal pay be frozen for FY 1983 and limited to 4 percent increases in the two subsequent years. The Senate Budget Committee also recommends a freeze on COLAs for all federal retirees. The U.S. Chamber supports these two proposals and urges Congress to adopt them as part of the FY 1983 budget. Given current deficit projections and the documented overcompensation in both pay and benefits, such a freeze is both necessary and equitable. Even with such a freeze, federal pay and pensions will still remain well above private sector levels.

Presented below are a number of facts and figures which support the Senate Budget Committee's proposal for a federal pay and pension freeze.

Because of poor management practices, benefits in excess of those received in the private sector and serious flaws in the pay comparability system, federal personnel costs are far higher than they should be to attract and keep competent workers.

On average, federal workers receive salaries that are 35.5 percent higher than private sector salaries, 45 percent higher than those of state and local workers, and 52 percent higher than pay in the manufacturing sector.

Federal pay excesses have widened over the past decade. In 1967, the federal premium over state and local salaries was 25 percent compared to the current 45 percent. Over the same period, the federal pay premium over manufacturing wages rose from 35 percent to 52 percent.

Similarly, federal benefits, including pensions, are considerably higher than those available in the private sector. Consider the following important differences:

Most federal workers, but few private workers, may retire at age 55 if they have thirty years of service. About half of all civil service retirees are under 60 compared to only 7 percent in the private sector. Further, private sector retirees do not receive full Social Security benefits until age 65.

Federal retirees have had their pensions fully indexed to the consumer price index (CPI). Only 3 percent of private sector retirees have this protection. Moreover, flaws in the CPI have led to overcompensation for inflation since the mid-1970's.

According to the Office of Personnel Management, if pension practices representative of the private sector were adopted by the Federal government, the cost to the taxpayer would drop from 28.2 percent of payroll to 16.7 percent.

Federal worker's compensation benefits can go as high as $829 per week compared to a typical private sector maximum of two-thirds of take-home pay—often capped at $250. Further, CBO estimates that the probability of receiving disability benefits is 50 percent greater for federal workers than for private workers.

Federal workers receive more generous vacation leave. They get 13 days of paid leave after one year of service. Only 6 percent of the private workforce does as well. After three years of service, federal workers get 4 weeks of vacation. Only about 2 percent of private workers get 3 or more weeks of vacation after three years.

In contrast to the popular perception of extensive federal layoffs, the fact is that only 7,592 employees out of a workforce of 2,717,000 have been laid off. Representing only three-tenths of one percent of all federal civilian workers, these layoffs are minor compared to the employment loss in the private sector.

STEALING FROM THE MIND

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, recent allegations about the theft of IBM computer secrets are but the latest reminders of an increasingly serious problem: The violation across borders of intellectual-property rights, which in many cases can no longer be protected adequately by patents.

A number of countries, in fact, are engaged in the practice of actually helping domestic companies produce and market products that rightfully belong to inventors outside those countries who hold lawful patents. The World Intellectual Property Organization of the United Nations is even considering rules that would further encourage, by legitimizing, the abrogation of patents.

In an essay that appeared in the New York Times recently, Mr. Barry MacTaggert, chairman and president of Pfizer International Inc., persuasively argued that the United States must take steps to oppose this stealing from the mind. It undermines international trade by eliminating a crucial incentive for technological innovation and research—the prospect that individuals might profit fairly from their enterprise. Moreover, violation of patent rights threatens American business and American jobs; most of this intellectual theft occurs in the area of high technology products, where American concerns have most often taken the lead.

Mr. President, this matter demands the attention of the Senate. I ask that Mr. MacTaggert's thoughtful and compelling article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, July 9, 1982]

STEALING FROM THE MIND

(By Barry MacTaggart)

In recent days many people have been shocked that Japanese businessmen might have stolen computer secrets from I.B.M. The allegations are the latest twist in the tense worldwide struggle for technological supremacy, but few businessmen, especially those involved in high-technological, research-based industries, can be very surprised.

Their inventions have been "legally" taken in country after country by governments' violation of intellectual-property rights, especially patents. It has been going on for some time, and it is getting worse. Through political and legal dealings, many governments, including Brazil, Canada, Mexico, India, Taiwan, South Korea, Italy and Spain, to name a few, have provided their domestic companies with ways to make and sell products that under proper enforcement and honorable treatment of patents would be considered the property of the inventors. And now, the United Nations, through its World Intellectual Property Organization, is trying to grab high-technology inventions for underdeveloped countries.

As more and more countries yearn for industrialization, it is ironic that less and less respect is given those laws and principles that have attended industrialization in the last hundred years. This is nowhere more true than in the area of patent protection for high technology, where learning how to manufacture a product requires enormous resources but actually manufacturing it sometimes turns out to be quite simple. It is in acquiring the knowledge to make new products—computers, pharmaceuticals, telecommunications equipment, chemicals and others—that American companies have been so good. And it is this knowledge that is being stolen by the denial of patent rights.

For example, India has denied Pfizer the right to exercise its own patent covering doxycycline, an antibiotic used widely around the world. It reserves to Indian companies the right to manufacture and sell that drug, even though the result has been that far less of it is available in India than is needed. Another illustration is Canada's compulsory licensing law, which has obliged Smith, Kline & French to grant patent rights on its antiulcer drug, Tagamet, to a local company that invested nothing in its research and development. The royalty in such a transaction is a meager 4 percent.

Patents are a vital stimulus to technological innovation and a vital part of doing business. In 1883, Western nations met in Paris to write a treaty that firmly conferred international legitimacy on intellectual-property rights—patents and trademarks—and asserted their critical relation to technological innovation. The thought then, which is still valid, was that the enormous human and financial costs attending technological innovation are worth the risks only if the invention is protected from duplication for a period of years in which the inventor can reasonably hope to recoup his costs. Under this arrangement, the inventor is then free to disseminate the technology.

Many developing countries, and some that are clearly developed, do not respect this arrangement. In many cases, however, their laws give the impression that they do, thereby encouraging inventors to place their products on the market. Once a product is on the market, the information issued with a patent makes it easy to steal the technology unless its protection is enforced.

The irony is that by eroding patent protection, governments are likely to accomplish the opposite of their professed intentions. They may appear to benefit from the inventions they take, but these gains are made at the expense of the system that nourishes industrial creativity.

What's more, the revisions to the Paris treaty being considered by delegates to the United Nations organization would confer international legitimacy on the abrogation of patents. The principle the World Intellectual Property Organization seeks to introduce would enable a nation to deny the inventor the protection of a patent or, worse still, prevent him from exercising his own invention if the product is not made from scratch in that nation.

So far, the United States has opposed such a theft of American technology. Unfortunately, European nations have failed to insist on the respect of these principles of international law and of the international economic system. Canada, Australia and New Zealand have gone even further and argue that for these purposes their nations should be considered developing countries! The competition for world markets and international business is becoming ever more tense, and that is the very reason the United States should insist more than ever that the principle underlying the international economic system be respected and upheld.●

HAWAII OBSERVES 23D ANNIVERSARY OF STATEHOOD

● Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, on August 21, 1959, Hawaii was admitted to the Union. Admissions Day, a State holiday, is celebrated annually by the people of the Island State on the third Friday in August.

I well remember the day in March 1959 when the statehood resolution won final congressional approval. I was serving then as a member of the territorial legislature and, on March 12, all the members of the legislature had gathered in the Throne Room of Iolani Palace—then the capitol building of the territory—to await a long-distance telephone call from our delegate to Congress, John A. Burns. His announcement of the favorable action taken by the Congress was greeted with a deafening cheer, followed immediately by an almost mystical silence, as if all those present had joined in silent prayer to thank God for the blessings of statehood, and to ask for His guidance in their new and heavier responsibilities.

In 1959, Hawaii had a population of about 600,000 people. The new State's economy was predominantly rural and agricultural, but, even then, it was the headquarters of the Pacific Fleet and the Pacific forces of the U.S. Army and Air Force as well. The racial and cultural ancestry of its people was diverse. Indeed, the ethnic diversity of Hawaii's people and the islands' geographical distance from the continental United States were among the principal arguments advanced by opponents of statehood.

The rightness of Congress in admitting Hawaii into the Union of States was never more appropriately recognized than by President John F. Kennedy in June 1963, when in his first major civil rights address before the National Conference of Mayors, assembled in Honolulu, he said he had chosen Hawaii as the platform for his speech because "Hawaii is what the United States is striving to be."

Today, Hawaii's population is approaching 1 million and, if anything, it is even more cosmopolitan than it was in 1959. The first 23 years of statehood have also brought unparalleled economic growth and diversification. While agriculture remains an important component in Hawaii's economy, it has been overtaken by the visitor industry. In 1959, visitors to Hawaii were numbered in the hundred thousands. Today, nearly 4 million tourists from all over the world visit Hawaii annually.

Hawaii has also become an important "gateway" to the nations of Asia and the Pacific Basin as the United States expands its trade in these areas. The Island State's strategic location in the Pacific has made it a natural "bridge" between East and West, a fact which was recognized by the Federal Government in the early 1960's when the East-West Center for Technical and Cultural Exchange was established in Honolulu.

During its first 23 years of statehood, Hawaii has also become a Pacific center of scientific research and education. Although it has no indigenous sources of fossil fuels, the Island State has become a leader in the development and commercialization of alternative forms of energy—solar energy, ocean thermal energy, wind energy, biomass, and hydroelectric power, among others. It is a pioneer in the field of aquaculture and tropical agricultural research, both promising fields which may eventually help alleviate the world food shortage. Research in Hawaii will also help unlock the remaining secrets of the universe. The exceptionally clear atmosphere atop Hawaii's tallest mountain, Mauna Kea, has led scientists from all over the world to select it as the site of a major observatory.

Despite the many changes which have occurred since 1959, Hawaii remains, in the words of Mark Twain, "The loveliest fleet of islands anchored in any ocean." I ask my colleagues in the Senate and House, and Americans throughout this country to join the people of Hawaii in celebrating its 23d anniversary of statehood.●

BLEAK OUTLOOK FOR AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, an article in today's Wall Street Journal graphically describes the bleak outlook for American agriculture. The article underscores how important it is for the Secretary of Agriculture first, to implement as quickly as possible the provisions in the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1982 relating to the Nation's farm programs, and second, use the broad discretionary authorities available to him under current law to immediately stabilize farm prices and provide credit assistance to farmers.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

U.S. FARMERS THIS YEAR HAVE REASON TO DREAD A BOUNTIFUL HARVEST

(By Sue Shellenbarger and Meg Cox)

SHABBONA, ILL.—To U.S. farmers this year, a bountiful harvest is not something to rejoice over.

So the news last week that the Agriculture Department is predicting a mammoth fall crop exceeding previous expectations was a shock to this farmland hamlet. Trading ceased at the local grain elevator as corn prices plunged. The decline immediately reduced the value of farmer Eilert Goken's corn harvest by $20,000. A farm-implement dealer prepared to cancel orders for combines, while local bankers braced themselves for an increase in loan delinquencies. Farm-supply stores were without customers.

And at the Kountry Kitchen Restaurant, depressed farmers crowded around tables to deplore the news: a predicted corn crop of 8.32 billion bushels, up 1% from the 1981 record; a larger-than-expected soybean crop of 2.29 billion bushels, up 13% from last year; and a wheat harvest of 2.77 billion bushels, down 1% from last year's record yield, but resulting nonetheless in a large surplus.

"This crop report is a disaster for a lot of farmers, including me," says Stanley Boehne, who now has no hope for repaying his bank debt this fall.

EXPECTING THE WORST

In a farm-belt economy already reeling from three years of bad news, the crop report may have been the worst news since the 1980 embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union. Unless an early frost or other damage in the next several weeks reduces the harvest drastically, the grain glut will have far-reaching consequences.

Already, farm economists are scrambling to revise their forecasts to reflect what the chief agricultural economist of Chase Econometrics, Raymond Daniel, calls "absolutely the worst-case scenario."

The long-term outlook, experts say, is getting bleaker. Already-depressed farm prices will sink to even lower levels, thus shrinking farm income and land values. Farm-equipment makers, farm suppliers and rural banks aren't likely to fare better. Farm groups will certainly step up pressure on the Reagan administration to pay farmers directly to idle some of their land for the first time in several years. Pressure for a new grain treaty with the Soviet Union will also increase as the government is forced to spend billions of dollars managing huge surpluses.

Reduced farm income could also accelerate the deterioration of land quality, as farmers neglect soil conservation in order to pay their most pressing bills. Worsening that problem, federal budget proposals include cutbacks in federal aid for conservation.

COMPANY FOR MISERY

There are scattered bright spots. A mammoth surplus would mean business for storage operations, and lower feed-grain prices should reduce costs for livestock growers and, eventually, for consumers at retail meat markets. But for most, the latest USDA crop forecast brought a growing sense of despair. "This is the last nail in the coffin of the crop farmer," says Terry Francl, an agricultural economist at Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. in Chicago. At the Hi-Way-Lounge on Route 30 here, a farmer couldn't agree more. Sipping a beer and contemplating fields bursting with corn, he says: "What the hell, I might as well burn it."

Farmers elsewhere have reason to feel the same way. Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates predicts a sharp drop in farmers' cash receipts in 1983, reflecting a 9% drop in corn prices and a 10% drop in soybean prices. Since the USDA corn crop report, Wharton's chief agricultural economist John Urbanchuk has trimmed his forecast of 1983 net farm income by more than 10% to between $21 billion and $23 billion.

Low returns will depress Midwestern farm prices, already in their longest slide in 20 years. (Around Shabbona, land prices dropped more than 25% in the past 18 months to about $2,500 an acre.) That in turn will reduce farmers' equity and borrowing power, putting many in a severe cash squeeze. "This is affecting good farmers, not just people who are poor managers," says Robert Keil, a vice president of First National Bank in De Kalb, Ill. The result, experts say, will be more bankruptcies, foreclosures and forced liquidations.

FOREIGN-MARKET PROBLEMS

"Farmers who have hung on by their fingernails the last few years will have to let go," says James Anderson, a farm lender at First National Bank in Baltic, S.D. "We took second mortgages on a dozen farmers, so they could hang on one more year. But the way it looks now, this year won't allow them to turn around."

Foreign grain-buyers won't rescue farmers, either. "We think agricultural-export growth will be limited over the next four years," says Richard Pottorff, an economist with Data Resources Inc. In part that is because "there are economic problems with our key growth-markets like Eastern Europe and Mexico." Mexico, which has become the best U.S. grain buyer after Japan, because of recent peso devaluations will find U.S. grain less affordable.

The Agriculture Department expects a surplus of 125 million metric tons of all grains next year, after exports. And even if the Soviet harvest is meager, as expected, and Soviet purchases exceed predictions, U.S. farmers can't expect too much help there. Soviet grain purchases from the U.S. peaked at only 15.2 million metric tons in 1979.

The burden of that expected surplus will weigh heavily on farm suppliers and agribusiness. Highly competitive seed-corn sellers, just starting their season, expect farmers to cut back orders in anticipation of a new government set-aside program next year.

Some small seed-companies won't survive, predicts Frank Thorp, whose Clinton, Ill., seed business sells a modest 100,000 bags a year. "One of my distributors in Indiana is scared that as many as 40% of his farmer-clients won't survive until next planting season" because of low farm prices.

Effective government inducements to farmers to let land lie fallow would also hurt pesticide and agricultural-chemical sales, says Dave Anderson, the director of marketing for Brayton Chemicals Inc., a Burlington, Iowa-based pesticide distributor. "I don't think people realize how bad things are," he says. "We'll have to be aggressive just to stay even."

Fertilizer sales will be hit hard again after a 10% decline—the steepest in seven years—in the year ended June 30, "I was predicting an increase in fertilizer use by farmers in 1983, until I saw the crop report," says Agriculture Department economist Paul Andrilenas. "Even if farmers use more fertilizer per acre, a set-aside may still mean lower fertilizer use."

Already suffering farm-equipment dealers worry about spending another winter trying to decide how many more mechanics to lay off. In De Kalb, after a six- to eight-month slump, Forster Implement Co.'s sales of Deere & Co. farm equipment started to pick up in recent weeks. But last week's crop report has stopped the tentative recovery cold, manager Max Heide says. He is considering canceling orders he placed for winter delivery of combines.

Two of the most troubled farm-equipment makers, International Harvester Co. and Massey-Ferguson, say their already conservative forecasts anticipated another depressed year in the farm economy in 1983. But some analysts say the crop report portends even greater pressures on a severely distressed industry. "In my opinion, the manufacturers haven't cut production enough, and we'll see additional cutbacks in the near future," says Larry Hollis, an analyst with Robert W. Baird & Co. "This big a crop will mean additional strains on balance sheets for both manufacturers and dealers."

DEPLETED SOIL

A longer-range problem exacerbated by the pending harvest, some say, is declining farm land quality. "We're already losing six billion tons of topsoil a year, and this crop will make it worse," says Barbara MacKenzie, the president of a new nonprofit group seeking to raise money for farm conservation.

The liquidity squeeze brought on by lower prices will make it difficult for farmers to build terraces, drainage ditches and dams and to take other measures to steward their land. And a proposed cut in federal conservation financing will add to those woes. "I don't think I'll be able to afford conservation projects for another two years," says Yuma, Colo., farmer Milton Mekelburg, the president of the National Association of Conservation Districts.

The expected grain surplus also will plague the federal budget. With corn stockpiles alone expected to mount from one-fourth of a year's production this fall to one-third by next fall, government programs to manage surpluses could cost the U.S. as much as $4 billion next year, estimates Abner Womack, a University of Missouri economist.

The Reagan administration tried to hold down this year's crop by offering low-cost operating loans and other benefits to farmers who idled 10% to 15% of their land. To get a loan, the farmer also must hold his surplus grain off the market, thus supporting prices. But prices are sinking so low that farmers are expected in the next few months to default on loans covering hundreds of millions of the 1.25 billion bushels of corn in storage under the program. Then, they will simply have to turn the corn over to the government. "A (storage) crisis could develop," an Agriculture Department official says. The department has scheduled emergency meetings throughout the farm belt this week to ask grain concerns for help in locating storage space.

A LOSING GAMBLE

Clearly, the government's farm policy failed: about 75% of U.S. corn growers spurned government help and gambled on prices holding up. Now, they're at the mercy of the market.

To avoid a similar farm-policy failure next year, farm groups are pressing the government to pay farmers directly to idle acres. Indeed, a spokesman for Agriculture Secretary John Block says that Mr. Block has changed his position and "won't oppose" such a subsidy next year.

Certainly, the glut is a boon to storage operations. As farmers prepare for the huge harvest, the wait to buy a grain bin has already grown from a week to a month. The agri-products division of Butler Manufacturing Co. has been making bins, at capacity for 60 days. "We could't produce many more than we are, and I think that's true of the industry," says Werner Eugster, the president of the division.

The glut should have at least some effect on consumer food-prices. Low-cost grain is supposed to result in a rapid increase in the numbers of hogs and chickens, thus reducing retail meat prices within six months to a year.

ONLY SLIGHTLY LOWER

But that food-price relief probably will be slight. Dennis Steadman, an agricultural economist at Chase Econometrics, says he lowered his estimate of the consumer price index for food next year by only 0.2% because of the USDA crop report.

Moreover, low-priced corn doesn't particularly excite livestock farmers. John Goeller, a Pilger, Neb., hog and cattle raiser, fears that cheap corn will lead to bigger and fatter hog herds and lower profits for him. "If every farmer raising hogs right now puts an extra 20 pounds on every hog, that would mean a 10% jump in the pork supply," he says. "Cheap grain makes cheap livestock. That's a rule as old as agriculture."

Suppliers to livestock farmers are similarly unenthralled. Despite a recent surge in profits after several money-losing years, hog raisers are still short of money for new equipment, says Tim Cumberland of Sand Livestock Systems Inc., a maker of livestock confinement buildings. "It may be another year before we see more orders from this (increased crop estimate) and then it depends on farmers getting financing."

In rural communities throughout the Midwest, even nonfarmers greeted the crop report with despair. "I haven't translated the latest grain report into the number of cars I won't sell, but things don't look good," says Harry Schlapia, a Ford dealer in Creston, Iowa. "Less than half our customers are farmers, but when they quit buying, so do the businessmen downtown."

In downtown Shabbona, closed storefronts reflect the damage already done by the sagging farm economy. Remaining merchants say additional crop-price declines will multiply the damage. "A lot of merchants are ready to go out of business," says Elizabeth Weber, whose antique shop rarely opens these days. "They're just hanging by a thread."

A few miles outside town, Mr. Boehne, the farmer, and his wife scratch their heads over the household budget. Since last week's crop report was released, they have been trying to cut spending on personal and farm needs. To Mr. Boehne, the report portends the loss of several thousand dollars in harvest income and dashes hopes of modestly reducing his bank debt this fall. The day the report was released, he joked to his banker: "Give me notice before you shut me down."

Walking across his farmyard near his lush fields of ripening corn, Mr. Boehne talks about hope. "You just can't lay down and die," he says. "But it's hard when you're so deep in debt. I just hope the bank goes along with me." On paper, Mr. Boehne says, his net worth is $1 million. "But when times get tough," he adds, "you can't eat the land." ●

THE NOMINATION OF OLIVER RICHARD TO THE FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am sorry that the Reagan administration has once again rejected an opportunity to show sensitivity to issues of real concern to those who live in the Northeast and Midwest. There are real regional differences in energy demands and problems. Consumers should have confidence that those concerns will be heard and understood. One way to instill such confidence would be to establish some balance on the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Of immediate concern is our natural gas policy. Unfortunately, instead of a reasoned and careful debate in Congress about possible changes to the National Gas Policy Act, we are likely to get a confused and emotional debate at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. The notice of inquiry now being conducted by the Commission has not inspired confidence that the fairness issues bound up in the natural gas pricing question will be carefully treated. Even if it had the will, the FERC does not have the capacity to deal with these issues. Only the Congress has the capability to cushion for consumers the effects of any changes in the NGPA that might be contemplated. For this reason, I cosponsored the resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. CHAFEE, opposing FERC's administrative control of natural gas.

The function of the Senate, however, is not to choose among nominees for FERC commissioners, but rather to review the qualifications of the nominees chosen by the President. But we do have an obligation to insure that those who seek confirmation are competent, honest individuals who can perform the job they are undertaking. In this regard, the members of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee are better able than usual to report on this nominee's qualifications. We have all worked with Rick Richard while he served on Senator JOHNSTON's staff. I, for one, know Rick to be an able, competent, and objective person.

Even still, I have taken extensive steps to make clear to Rick my concerns about FERC gas policy and their responsibility to follow congressional direction. I am reassured both from private meetings and his testimony at his confirmation hearing that he has an open mind on natural gas pricing issues.

No one knows exactly what is going on in the natural gas market today. As recently as 10 months ago, many people thought changes to the Natural Gas Policy Act were absolutely necessary; although no two people agreed on exactly what changes should be made, many wanted changes. The natural gas market is changing dramatically, however, and now there are many more questions to be answered before serious proposals can be made to change the NGPA. If the notice of inquiry sheds light on these questions, perhaps it will be worthwhile. Prices for deep gas are falling from their earlier, incredible heights—$10 per 1,000 cubic feet, the equivalent of $60 per barrel oil—back down to $5 or $6 per 1,000 cubic feet, more in line with $30 to $35 per barrel oil. Will this trend continue? Will supplies be sufficient to keep natural gas prices in line with oil prices in 1985 when more of the price controls come off of natural gas? We certainly need to know the answers to these and other questions before coming to any conclusions about changes to natural gas pricing policy. I am satisfied that Rick Richard will not advocate any precipitate action and that he will undertake to insure that consumer interests have a prominent place in reaching natural gas pricing decisions.

Perhaps along with others, the Senate Energy Committee will figure prominently in any review of natural gas policy. I for one intend to insist that Congress uses its full powers in this matter.

Although I lament the fact that the President has chosen to forego regional balance on the Commission, I believe that Rick Richard will serve ably on the Commission and I am happy to have voted for his nomination.●

PAID DIVERSION UNDER THE OMNIBUS RECONCILIATION ACT

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, today U.S. farmers face disastrously low prices stemming from oversupplies of commodities and weak demand.

In adopting the conference report on the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1982, Congress provided the administration with an important tool to use in assisting U.S. farmers. The reconciliation bill requires the Secretary of Agriculture to implement paid land diversion programs in 1983 for wheat, feed grain, and rice farmers. The bill requires that the paid diversion programs provide for the diversion of at least 5 percent of each participating farmer's acreage base. However, under the conference report, the Secretary could provide for a higher percentage of paid diversion for these commodities.

In the past several days, commodity prices have fallen drastically as the markets reacted to recent estimates of exceptionally large harvests in 1982. In light of these recent developments, Secretary Block should seriously consider going beyond the minimum 5-percent paid diversion to programs larger in scope. The commodity programs for 1983 must be responsive to the needs of farmers, and it now appears that 5-percent paid diversions might not be sufficient to strengthen farm prices adequately.

Also, the Secretary should rapidly implement the provisions of the 1981 farm bill providing for storage facility loans to farmers in storage deficient areas. The very large grain crop now being harvested and the near record carryover stocks of grain have produced serious storage deficits in many areas and increases in storage charges in other areas.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed the RECORD a summary of the provisions of the conference report on the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1982 concerning the agricultural paid land diversion programs and the related agricultural and nutrition provisions of the report.

The summary referred to follows:

SUMMARY OF THE PROVISIONS OF TITLE I—AGRICULTURAL, FORESTRY, AND RELATED PROGRAMS

SUBTITLE A—DAIRY PRICE SUPPORT PROGRAM (SEC. 101)

The Conference Report will revise the milk price support program for fiscal years 1983 through 1985.

Price support levels

Effective for fiscal years 1983 and 1984, the price of milk will be supported at not less than $13.10 per hundredweight of milk containing 3.67 percent milkfat. During fiscal year 1985, the price of milk will be supported at not less than the percentage of the parity price for milk that $13.10 per hundredweight represents as of October 1, 1983.

Deductions

The Conference Report will also authorize deductions from the proceeds of all commercial sales of milk by dairy farmers, as follows:

(1) During fiscal years 1983 through 1985, the Secretary of Agriculture will be authorized to provide for a deduction of 50 cents per hundredweight of milk (the deductions to be remitted to the Commodity Credit Corporation) if the Secretary estimates that, during the fiscal year involved, net price support purchases will be 5 billion pounds milk equivalent or more. The deductions collected would be applied to offset costs incurred under the milk price support program.

(2) During fiscal years 1984 and 1985, the Secretary will be authorized to provide for the deduction of an additional 50 cents per hundredweight of milk (the deductions to be remitted to the Commodity Credit Corporation) if the Secretary estimates that, during the fiscal year involved, net price support purchases will be 7.5 billion pounds milk equivalent or more. If this second deduction is implemented, the Secretary must establish a program under which dairy farmers can obtain refund of the second deduction if they reduce their marketings of milk. The deductions collected that are not refunded will be applied to offset costs incurred under the milk price support program. For the purposes of determining refunds for reduced marketings, each dairy farmer will be assigned a base, which will be equal to the marketings made by the dairy farmer during fiscal year 1982 or, at the option of the Secretary, the average annual marketings during fiscal years 1982 or, at the option of the Secretary, the average annual marketings during fiscal years 1981 and 1982. The Secretary could make adjustments in individual bases as the Secretary determines necessary to correct for abnormal factors affecting milk production and to reflect other factors that the Secretary determines should be considered in establishing a fair and equitable base. This authority will permit the Secretary, in appropriate circumstances, to establish bases for dairy farmers who did not produce milk, or had reduced production of milk, during the base calculation period. A dairy farmer could qualify for a refund of the entire amount of the second deduction for a fiscal year by reducing his marketings during the year by an amount that bears the same ratio to his base marketings as the national surplus milk production bears to overall production for the year. For dairy farmers who do not reduce marketings enough to receive a full refund, the Secretary could, nonetheless, provide for the refund of a portion of each

50-cent deduction proportionate to the amount of reduction achieved by the dairy farmer.

The Conference Report also contains provisions to facilitate compliance with, and administration of, the deduction program.

SUBTITLE B—DONATION OF DAIRY PRODUCTS (SEC. 110)

The Conference Report will amend section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949, which authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to donate dairy products (acquired by the Corporation through price support operations) for use in the United States in nonprofit school lunch and child feeding programs, to assist needy persons, and in charitable institutions (including hospitals).

Under the Conference Report, additional language will be added to section 416 also to permit the donation of the dairy products to needy households in the United States, to meet the needs of persons receiving nutrition assistance under the Older Americans Act of 1965, and (through foreign governments and humanitarian organizations) to assist needy persons outside the United States. The Corporation will be authorized to pay reprocessing and handling costs (including the cost of overseas delivery) involved in donations to persons outside the United States; and such donations will be coordinated with similar foreign aid programs, as provided under Public Law 480, and will be in addition to assistance provided under Public Law 480.

SUBTITLE C—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM FOR THE 1983 CROPS OF WHEAT, FEED GRAINS, UPLAND COTTON, AND RICE

Advance deficiency payments (sec. 120)

The Conference Report will amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to add a new section 107C providing for advance deficiency payments on the 1982 through 1985 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice. Under new section 107C, advance deficiency payments could be made to producers of these commodities who participate in a voluntary acreage reduction program for the crop involved if the Secretary of Agriculture determines it likely that deficiency payments will be made.

The Secretary will be required to make advance deficiency payments available to producers who participate in the acreage limitation programs for the 1982 crops of these commodities. Advance payments will equal 70 percent of the projected final payment and will be made as soon as practicable after October 1, 1982. The Secretary will be able to adjust the amount of the advance deficiency payment to any producer who has received a disaster payment on the commodity involved.

For the 1983 crops, the Secretary will be required—and for the 1984 and 1985 crops, the Secretary will have the authority—to make advance deficiency payments to producers who agree to participate in an acreage limitation or set-aside program for the crop involved. Payments will be made available to producers as soon as practicable after they file notices of intention to participate in the program. Payment would be provided in an amount determined by the Secretary as appropriate to encourage participation in the program, but not to exceed 50 percent of the projected final payment due the producer.

Producers will be required to refund any overpayment under new section 107C at the end of the marketing year for the crop involved. And, if the producer fails to comply with requirements under the acreage limitation or set-aside program involved (and, in the case of the 1983 crops of wheat, feed grains, and rice, the requirements of the paid land diversion program involved) after receiving an advance deficiency payment, the producer will be required to repay the advance, with interest, immediately.

1983 wheat loans (sec. 121)

The Conference Report will amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to increase the minimum price support loan and purchase rate for the 1983 crop of wheat (by 10 cents) to $3.65 per bushel.

1983 wheat acreage reduction and diversion programs (sec. 122)

The Conference Report will amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to require an acreage limitation program and a paid land diversion program for the 1983 crop of wheat. Under the provisions of the Conference Report, a wheat farmer who agrees to participate in the 1983 wheat program will be required to reduce his wheat acreage base for the farm in 1983 (i.e., plant to wheat for harvest in 1983 a number of acres on the farm equal to his wheat acreage base minus the required reduction) by 15 percent under the acreage limitation program, and an additional 5 percent under the paid land diversion program, as a condition of eligibility for loans, purchases, and payments under the program for the 1983 crop of wheat.

The Secretary of Agriculture could implement a program requiring wheat farmers to make reductions in production on the wheat acreage base in 1983 greater than the 20 percent provided for in the Conference Report. The Secretary could accomplish this by increasing the scope of the paid land diversion program to require a paid diversion of more than 5 percent, or by increasing the scope of the acreage limitation program to require that the wheat acreage base be reduced by more than 15 percent. To the extent that the Secretary expands the scope of the wheat acreage limitation program, he must increase the scope of the paid land diversion program so that the paid diversion percentage retains the same proportion to the acreage limitation percentage as that specified in the provisions of the Conference Report—5:15.

The Conference Report provides that the wheat acreage base for a farm for the 1983 crop (for purposes of calculating the reduction of planted acreage required to meet the specifications of the wheat acreage limitation and paid land diversion programs) will be the wheat acreage base applicable to the farm under the acreage limitation program for the 1982 crop of wheat, adjusted to reflect established crop rotation practices and other factors that the Secretary determines should be considered in determining a fair and equitable base. In making adjustments to a base, the Secretary is expected to consider the special problems of farmers who follow a normal summer-fallow crop rotational practice.

Under the paid land diversion program, a wheat farmer will be eligible for payment in an amount equal to the product obtained by miltiplying the additional acreage diverted from production under the program, by the 1983 wheat program payment yield for the farm, by the diversion program payment rate. This payment rate will be established by the Secretary but cannot be less than $3.00 per bushel of wheat, except that the Secretary could reduce the payment rate by as much as 10 percent—or to $2.70 per bushel—if the Secretary determines that the objective of the program could be achieved with the lower rate. The Secretary will be required to make not less than half of any payment due a wheat farmer under the paid land diversion program to the farmer in advance of any determination of performance and as soon as practicable in fiscal year 1983 after the farmer enters into the land diversion contract. Farmers who receive advance payments but fail to comply with the terms of the land diversion contract after receiving an advance payment will be required to repay the advance, with interest, immediately.

1983 feed grain loans (Sec. 123)

The Conference Report will amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to increase the minimum price support loan and purchase rate for the 1983 crop of corn (by 10 cents) to $2.65 per bushel. (The price support loan rates for the other feed grains will be set, under current law, at levels that the Secretary determines fair and equitable in relation to the level set for corn.)

1983 feed grain acreage reduction and diversion programs (sec. 124)

The Conference Report will amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to require an acreage limitation (or set-aside) program and a paid land diversion program for the 1983 crop of feed grains. Under the provisions of the Conference Report, a feed grain farmer who agrees to participate in the 1983 feed grain program will be required to reduce his feed grain acreage base for the farm in 1983 (i.e., plant to feed grains for harvest in 1983 a number of acres on the farm equal to his feed grain acreage base minus the required reduction) by 10 percent under the acreage limitation (or set-aside) program, and an additional 5 percent under the paid land diversion program, as a condition of eligibility for loans, purchases, and payments under the program for the 1983 crop of feed grains.

The Secretary of Agriculture could implement a program requiring feed grain farmers to make reductions in production on the feed grain acreage base in 1983 greater than the 15 percent provided for in the Conference Report. The Secretary could accomplish this by increasing the scope of the paid land diversion program to require a paid land diversion of more than 5 percent, or by increasing the scope of the acreage limitation (or set-aside) program to require that the feed grain acreage base be reduced by more than 10 percent. To the extent that the Secretary expands the scope of the feed grain acreage limitation (or set-aside) program, he must also increase the scope of the paid land diversion program so that the paid diversion percentage retains the same proportion to the acreage limitation (or set-aside) percentage as that specified in the provisions of the Conference Report—5:10.

The Conference Report provides that the feed grain acreage base for a farm for the 1983 crop (for purposes of calculating the reduction of planted acreage required to meet the specifications of the feed grain acreage limitation (or set-aside) and paid land diversion programs) will be the feed grain acreage base applicable to the farm under the acreage limitation program for the 1982 crop of feed grains, adjusted to reflect established crop rotation practices and other factors that the Secretary determines should be considered in determining a fair and equitable base. In making adjustments to a base, the Secretary is expected to consider the special problems of farmers who follow a normal summer-fallow crop rotational practice.

Under the paid land diversion program, a feed grain farmer will be eligible for payment in an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying the additional acreage diverted from production under the program, by the 1983 feed grain program payment yield for the farm, by the diversion payment rate. This payment rate will be established by the Secretary but cannot be less than $1.50 per bushel of corn, except that the Secretary could reduce the payment rate for corn by as much as 10 percent—or to $1.35 per bushel—if the Secretary determines that the objective of the program could be achieved with the lower rate. The payment rates for grain sorghums, oats, and, if designated by the Secretary, barley will be set by the Secretary at levels the Secretary determines are fair and reasonable in relation to the rate for corn. The Secretary will be required to make not less than half of any payment due a feed grain farmer under the paid land diversion program to the farmer in advance of any determination of performance and as soon as practicable in fiscal year 1983 after the farmer enters into the land diversion contract. Farmers who receive advance payments but fail to comply with the terms of the land diversion contract after receiving an advance payment will be required to repay the advance, with interest, immediately.

1983 rice acreage reduction and diversion programs (sec. 125)

The Conference Report will amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to require an acreage limitation program and a paid land diversion program for the 1983 crop of rice. Under the provisions of the Conference Report, a rice farmer who agrees to participate in the 1983 rice program will be required to reduce his rice acreage base for the farm in 1983 (i.e., plant to rice for harvest in 1983 a number of acres on the farm equal to his rice acreage base minus the required reduction) by 15 percent under the acreage limitation program and an additional 5 percent under the paid land diversion program, as a condition of eligibility for loans, purchases, and payments under the program for the 1983 crop of rice.

The Secretary of Agriculture could implement a program requiring rice farmers to make reductions in production on the rice acreage base in 1983 greater than the 20 percent provided for in the Conference Report. The Secretary could accomplish this by increasing the scope of the paid land diversion program to require a paid diversion of more than 5 percent, or by increasing the scope of the acreage limitation program to require that the rice acreage base be reduced by more than 15 percent. To the extent that the Secretary expands the scope of the rice acreage limitation program, he must also increase the scope of the paid land diversion program so that the paid diversion percentage retains the same proportion to the acreage limitation percentage as that specified in the provisions of the Conference Report—5:15.

The Conference Report provides that the rice acreage base for a farm for the 1983 crop (for purposes of calculating the reduction of planted acreage required to meet the specifications of the rice acreage limitation and paid land diversion programs) will be the rice acreage base applicable to the farm under the acreage limitation program for the 1982 crop of rice, adjusted to reflect established crop rotation practices and other factors that the Secretary determines should be considered in determining a fair and equitable base.

Under the paid land diversion program, a rice farmer will be eligible for payment in an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying the additional acreage diverted from production under the program, by the 1983 rice program payment yield for the farm, by the diversion payment rate. This payment rate will be established by the Secretary but cannot be less than $3.00 per hundredweight, except that the Secretary could reduce the payment rate by as much as 10 percent—to $2.70 per hundredweight—if the Secretary determines that the objective of the program could be achieved with the lower rate. The Secretary will be required to make not less than half of any payment due a rice farmer under the paid land diversion program to the farmer in advance of any determination of performance and as soon as possible in fiscal year 1983 after the farmer enters into the land diversion contract. Farmers who receive advance payments but fail to comply with the terms of the land diversion contract after receiving an advance payment will be required to repay the advance, with interest, immediately.

SUBTITLE D—AGRICULTURE EXPORT PROMOTION (SEC. 135)

The Conference Report will require the Secretary of Agriculture, in each of the 1983 through 1985 fiscal years, to use not less than $175 million, nor more than $190 million, of the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation for agricultural export development activities authorized under current law. The program authorized under this subtitle will be carried out through the Commodity Credit Corporation. Activities that could be financed under this subtitle include "buy-down" plans to reduce interest rates on export loans, loan guarantees on "buy-down" loans, direct loans to finance export transactions, and export subsidy programs (where appropriate to counter unfair trade practices of other countries).

SUBTITLE E—FOOD STAMP ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1982

Definition of "household" (sec. 142)

The Conference Report will require that all parents and children or siblings who live together be treated as a single household for purposes of the food stamp program, unless one of the parents or siblings is elderly or disabled.

The Conference Report also provides that an individual who lives with others, but who is 60 years of age or older and who is unable to purchase food and prepare meals because of a disability, will be treated as a separate household, together with his or her spouse, without regard to the purchase of food and preparation of meals if the gross income of the other individuals with whom the person lives does not exceed 165 percent of the poverty line.

Also, each household's food stamp allotment and (after adjustment for inflation) both the standard deduction and the excess shelter/dependent care deduction under the food stamp program will be rounded down to the nearest whole dollar increment.

Allotments will be computed by taking the unrounded cost of the thrifty food plan as of the prior June, reducing this number by one percent, making the appropriate household size adjustments, and then rounding the resulting figure for each household size down to the nearest lower dollar. In fiscal year 1986, the October 1 adjustment of the thrifty food plan will return to being based on the cost of the food plan through the preceding June 30 without the one percent reduction.

Standard utility allowance (sec. 149)

The Conference Report will specifically permit a State food stamp agency to use a standard utility allowance in computing a food stamp household's excess shelter expense deduction. An allowance that does not fluctuate within a year to reflect seasonal variations will be permitted, but a standard allowance for a heating or cooling expense could not be used for a household that does not incur a heating or cooling expense or for households in public housing units with central utility meters. States could use a separate standard utility allowance for households without heating or cooling expenses as long as these allowances are reflective of the utility costs incurred by these households. Prorating of the allowance will be required in the case of households sharing a residential unit.

Migrant farmworkers (sec. 150)

The Conference Report will preclude the Secretary of Agriculture from waiving the current requirement of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 that the calculation of household income for migrant farmworkers for purposes of the food stamp program occur on a prospective basis.

Financial resources (sec. 151)

The Conference Report will preclude the Secretary of Agriculture, with some exceptions, from altering the food stamp financial resources limitations that were in effect as of June 1, 1982. The Conference Report also will require that accessible savings or retirement accounts be counted in determining whether the financial resources limitation under the food stamp program has been exceeded.

Studies (sec. 152)

The Conference Report will delete the requirement for three studies that have been completed and deletes a requirement for an annual report to Congress on the effect of elimination of the purchase requirement under the food stamp program.

Categorical eligibility (sec. 153)

The Conference Report will permit States to consider households in which all members receive aid to families with dependent children and whose gross income does not exceed 130 percent of the poverty line to have satisfied the resource limitation requirements under the food stamp program.

Wavier of reporting requirements; cost-effectiveness of monthly reporting systems (secs. 154 and 156)

The Conference Report provides that a State food stamp agency can, with the approval of the Secretary and if it can show that monthly reporting would result in unwarranted administrative expense, select categories of households that can report at less frequent intervals.

The Conference Report will permit the Secretary of Agriculture, upon the request of a State, to waive any food stamp periodic reporting rules (other than those exempting certain categories of recipients from periodic reports) to the extent necessary to allow the State to establish periodic reporting rules for the food stamp program that are similar to those for the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

The Conference Report will also exclude from food stamp monthly reporting requirements households without earned income in which all adult members are elderly or disabled.

Approval of periodic reporting forms (sec. 155)

The Conference Report will remove the requirement that the Secretary of Agriculture design or approve the forms used by the States for nonperiodic reporting of changes in household circumstances under the food stamp program.

Employment and job search requirements; voluntary quit (secs. 157 and 158)

The Conference Report provides that, at the option of the State, job search requirements under the food stamp program could be imposed on applicants for food stamps, as well as recipients.

The Conference Report will permit the Secretary to fix the starting point of the disqualification period for participants in the food stamp program when the participant has voluntarily quit a job, and increase the disqualification period for voluntarily quitting a job from 60 to 90 days.

The Conference Report will extend the definition of voluntary quit without good cause (and the attendant period of ineligibility) to include Federal, State, or local government employees who have been dismissed from their jobs because of participation in a strike against the government entity involved.

Parents and caretakers of children (sec. 159)

The Conference Report will eliminate the exemption from work registration under the food stamp program for parents or caretakers of children when the parent or caretaker is part of a household in which there is another able-bodied parent or caretaker subject to food stamp work requirements. The effect of this provision is to require a second parent or caretaker in a household to register for work when the youngest child in the household reaches the age of 6. If, however, the youngest child is less than the age of 12, the second parent can decline employment if adequate child care is unavailable.

Joint employment regulations (sec. 160)

The Conference Report will remove the requirement for joint issuance of regulations on work registration by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Labor, and remove the requirement that these regulations be patterned after those for the work incentive program.

College students (sec. 161)

The Conference Report will revise food stamp eligibility requirements for post-secondary students by limiting participation by students with dependents to those with dependent children under the age of 6 and students who are receiving aid to families with dependent children, unless the college student is the parent of a dependent child above the age of 5 and under the age of 1 for whom adequate child care is not available.

Issuance procedures (sec. 162)

The Conference Report will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to require State food stamp agencies to use alternative issuance systems or to issue, in lieu of food stamps, reusable documents to be used as part of an automatic data processing system, if the Secretary, in consultation with the Inspector General, determines that use of such system or documents is necessary to improve the integrity of the food stamp program. Retail food stores could not be required to bear the cost of any system or document.

Initial allotments (sec. 163)

The Conference Report will eliminate any prorated food stamp benefits of less than $10.

House-to-house trade routes (sec. 165)

The Conference Report will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to limit the operation of house-to-house trade routes under the food stamp program to those that are reasonably necessary to provide households with adequate access to food if the Secretary finds, in consultation with the Department's Inspector General, that operation of house-to-house trade routes in a given area damages the integrity of the food stamp program.

Approval of State agency materials (sec. 166)

The Conference Report will prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from requiring that the States submit, for prior approval, State food stamp agency instructions, interpretations of policy, methods of administration, forms, or other materials, unless the State determines that they alter or amend its plan of operation for the food stamp program or conflict with the rights and levels of benefits to which households are entitled.

Points and hours of certification and issuance (sec. 167)

The Conference Report will eliminate the requirement that State food stamp agencies comply with Federal standards with regard to points and hours of certification and issuance.

Authorized representatives (sec. 168)

The Conference Report will permit the Secretary of Agriculture to (1) restrict the number of households for which one individual may serve as an authorized representative under the food stamp program and (2) establish criteria and verification standards for representatives and for households that may be represented. The Secretary could not, however, exclude categories of households from using authorized representatives on the basis of age, household composition, or employment status unless necessary to control a documented pattern of abuse.

Disclosure of information (sec. 169)

The Conference Report will allow the disclosure of information obtained from food stamp households to persons connected with the administration or enforcement of Federal assistance programs and federally-assisted State programs other than the food stamp program.

Expedited service (sec. 170)

The Conference Report will revise expedited service requirements under the Food Stamp Act of 1977 to require that expedited service be provided within 5 calendar days to households (1) having gross incomes lower than $150 per month or that are destitute migrant or seasonal farmworker households in accordance with the regulations governing such households in effect July 1, 1982, and (2) having liquid resources that do not exceed $100. The State food stamp agency will also be required, to the extent practicable, to verify the income and liquid resources of the household prior to issuance of coupons to the household.

Duplicate receipt of food stamps (sec. 172)

The Conference Report will require State food stamp agencies to establish a system and take periodic action to verify that no individual is receiving food stamps in more than one jurisdiction in the State.

Certification systems (sec. 173)

The Conference Report will permit each State to choose whether (1) AFDC and general assistance households must have their food stamp application included in their AFDC or general assistance application, and (2) food stamp applicants must be certified eligible based on information in the AFDC or general assistance case file, to the extent reasonably verified information is available in the file.

Assurance of nonduplication with "cashed out" benefits (sec. 174)

The Conference Report will require the Secretary of Agriculture to require State food stamp agencies to conduct at least annual verification or other measures to ensure that individuals who have been "cashed out" of the food stamp program are not also receiving food stamps.

Disqualification and penalties for food stores (sec. 175)

The Conference Report will raise the maximum civil money penalty for each violation of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 or its regulations committed by a retail food store or wholesale food concern from $5,000 to $10,000. The Conference Report will also establish periods of disqualification applicable to such entities. The disqualification period for the first violation will be for a reasonable period of time between 6 months and 5 years. The disqualification period for a second violation will be for a reasonable period of time between 12 months and 10 years. A retail food store or wholesale food concern will be permanently disqualified for a third violation or for trafficking in food stamps or authorization documents.

Bonding for food stores (sec. 176)

The Conference Report will permit the Secretary of Agriculture to require retail food stores and wholesale food concerns that have previously been disqualified or subjected to a civil penalty under the Food Stamp Act of 1977 to furnish a bond to cover the value of food stamps they may subsequently redeem in violation of the Act. The Secretary will prescribe the amount and other terms and conditions of such bond by regulation.

Alternative means for collection of overissuances and States' share of recovered moneys (secs. 177 and 179)

The Conference Report will permit States to use other means of collection for fraudulent and nonfraudulent overissuances of food stamps besides cash repayment and benefit offset.

The Conference Report provides that States can retain 50 percent of the recovered overissuances arising from fraud and 25 percent of recovered nonfraudulent overissuances, except in the case of State error, in which case the State may retain none of the recovered overissuances.

Fraud claims collection procedure (sec. 178)

The Conference Report provides that the household of a person disqualified from participation in the food stamp program will have 30 days after a demand to choose between a reduced allotment or repayment in cash to reimburse the Government for any overissuance of food stamps.

State liability for errors (sec. 180)

The Conference Report will revise the provisions of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 governing State liability for errors. The Federal share of a State's administrative costs will be reduced for States with payment error rates exceeding nine percent in fiscal year 1983, seven percent in fiscal year 1984, and five percent in fiscal year 1985, except that States will not be sanctioned for fiscal year 1983 if their payment error rates are reduced by a third of the difference between a base period rate and five percent, and will not be sanctioned for fiscal year 1984 if their payment error rates are reduced by two thirds of the difference between the base rate and five percent. States will continue to be liable to the Secretary of Agriculture for certification losses due to negligence or fraud.

Employment requirement pilot project (sec. 181)

The Conference Report will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct 4 pilot projects to determine the effect of making nonexempt individuals ineligible to participate in the food stamp program if they do not, with certain exceptions, work at least 20 hours per week or participate in a workfare program. Persons demonstrating a willingness to work could not lose benefits.

Benefit impact study (sec. 182)

The Conference Report will require the Secretary of Agriculture to study and report to the House and Senate agriculture committees (an interim report by February 1, 1984, and final report by March 1, 1985) on the effect of reductions in food stamp benefits provided under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981, the Agriculture and Food Act of 1981, and any other laws enacted by the 97th Congress that affect the food stamp program.

Appropriation authorization (sec. 183)

The Conference Report will extend the authorization of appropriations for all programs under the Food Stamp Act, including the Puerto Rican block grant, as follows: $12.874 billion for fiscal year 1983, $13.145 billion for fiscal year 1984, and $13.933 billion for fiscal year 1985.

Puerto Rico block grant (sec. 184)

The Conference Report will require that, after fiscal year 1983, food assistance under the block grant to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under the Food Stamp Act of 1977 be made available in forms other than cash.

The Conference Report will also require the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study of the cash food assistance program in Puerto Rico, including the effect of the program on the nutritional status of residents of Puerto Rico and the economy of Puerto Rico, and report the findings of the study to the House and Senate agriculture committees not later than six months after the effective date of the Conference Report.

Similar workfare programs (sec. 185)

The Conference Report will require the Secretary of Agriculture to promulgate guidelines for food stamp workfare programs that will enable political subdivisions to operate the programs in a manner consistent with similar workfare programs operated by the subdivision. A political subdivision will be able to comply with food stamp workfare requirements by operating (1) a workfare program under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program or (2) any other workfare program that the Secretary determines meets the provisions and protections contained in the food stamp program.

Exemption of WIN participants from workfare (sec. 186)

The Conference Report will revise the workfare provisions of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 to provide that a State may, at its option, exempt work incentive (WIN) program participants involved at least 20 hours a week in the program from workfare requirements under the food stamp program.

Hours of workfare (sec. 187)

The Conference Report will change the maximum number of hours that an agency operating a workfare program under the Food Stamp Act of 1977 can require of a participating person. Under the revision, a workfare participant will not be required to work more hours than those equal to the value of the food stamp allotment to which the household is entitled divided by the applicable minimum wage, or more than 30 hours a week when added to any other hours worked during a week for compensation (in cash or in kind) in any other capacity.

Reimbursement for workfare administrative expenses (sec. 188)

The Conference Report will require the Secretary of Agriculture to reimburse agencies operating workfare projects under the Food Stamp Act of 1977, for administrative expenses not otherwise reimbursable, from one half of the funds saved from employment of persons who have participated in workfare programs. Such savings will be considered to be the amount equal to three times the dollar value of the decrease in food stamp allotments resulting from wages received for the first month of employment that commences while a person is participating in a workfare program for the first time or in the 30-day period immediately following the termination of the person's first participation in the workfare program. Payments to agencies cannot exceed their share of workfare administrative costs.

Distribution of surplus commodities (sec. 191)

The Conference Report states the sense of Congress that the Federal Government should take steps to distribute surplus food, or food that would otherwise be discarded, to hungry people of the United States; that State and local governments should enact donor liability laws to encourage private cooperative efforts to provide food for hungry people; and that food distribution and shipping entities should work with organizations to make food that would otherwise be wasted or discarded available for distribution to the hungry.

Effective dates (secs. 192 and 193)

The Conference Report provides that all the food stamp provisions will be effective on date of enactment, except for those provisions dealing with error rate reduction and Federal reimbursement of workfare administrative expenses, which will be effective October 1, 1982.

The Conference Report will also make the food stamp provisions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 (except for amendments concerning retrospective accounting and periodic reporting) and the food stamp provisions of the 1981 Farm Bill effective on the date of enactment, unless already effective.

STATES AND THE BALANCED BUDGET

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, in its "States and the Balanced Budget" editorial of Wednesday, August 4, 1982, in which it urged Senators to vote against Senate Joint Resolution 58, the proposed constitutional amendment altering Federal budget procedure, the Washington Post offered a compelling argument of impending economic doom. Unfortunately, the major assumptions of this argument were based upon serious errors of fact which undermine the conclusions of that editorial. As a member of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution and an original cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 58 I feel obligated to set the record straight.

The editorial warned Senators that the amendment would ultimately force the Federal Government to shift its responsibilities to the States without Federal money to pay for them, thereby creating a fiscal dilemma. The Post substantiated this claim by suggesting that the drafters of Senate Joint Resolution 58 acknowledged this "necessity" by deleting the section 4 provision which stated that:

> The Congress may not require that the States engage in additional activities without compensation equal to the additional costs.

The record indicates that this is a gross distortion of the circumstances by which this provision was deleted.

Contrary to the editorial no such burden-shifting prohibition was included in Senate Joint Resolution 58 as originally drafted. This section was added without objection, and without discussion, as an amendment offered by Senator HATCH at the May 7, 1981 markup of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution.

At the May 19, 1981 executive session of the Senate Judiciary Committee, I expressed my concerns that this section 4 language would repeal the federalist principles articulated in the 10th amendment. By stating that: "The Congress may not require that the States engage in additional activities without compensation equal to the additional costs." The section implies that the Congress could require that the States engage in additional activities so long as they were adequately compensated.

Notwithstanding the Post's inferences otherwise, the Supreme Court has ruled in numerous decisions that the 10th amendment denies any such plenary power to the Federal Government. In Penhurst State School against Halderman, an April 20, 1981, decision regarding Federal grant-in-aid programs for the education of the handicapped—an example erroneously depicted in the editorial—the court ruled that participation in such Federal programs "is voluntary and the States are given the choice of complying with the conditions set forth in the act or forgoing the benefits of Federal funding."

A discussion between Senator HATCH and myself brought to provisions similar to section 4 are often included in spending limitations to State constitutions in order to protect local governments from undue cost shifting. This is because State legislatures may force their subdivisions to engage in additional activities without compensation, as these subdivisions are wholly creatures of the States. State governments, however, need no such protection, as they are not creatures of the Federal Government. All powers not specifically delegated to the Federal Government are reserved to the States by the 10th amendment.

Senators DOLE and HEFLIN concurred in my analysis and expressed their reservations about the probable impact of this provision. Senator HATCH, who shared these reservations, maintained that in including this section it was not his intention to repeal the 10th amendment in part or in whole. He suggested that the committee study this language to determine whether it needed revision or deletion. After extensive investigation the principal sponsors concluded that section 4 was unnecessary and threatening to the integrity of the federalist principles enunciated in the 10th amendment. At the Judiciary Committee executive session of July 20, 1981, my motion to delete section 4 was approved without objection.

Nowhere in the public record on this matter is there to be found any suggestion that the Judiciary Committee's motive in deleting this section was to allow for any form of burden-shifting. In fact, the committee's purpose was to prevent that which the Post fictitiously asserts that the committee was advocating. The extensive committee record, as well as a colloquy offered on the Senate floor by Senators HATCH and DURENBERGER on July 29, 1982 (C.R. S. 9408), leaves little doubt as to the true intentions of the sponsors of this amendment.

In light of this extensive record, that the Post would attribute the very opposite motive to our actions indicates a clear case of insufficient research. What is most troubling is that this misrepresentation would be the justification for attacking a very sound legislative proposal.

The editorial borders on the irresponsible by asserting that if the proposed amendment were currently effective, it would prohibit States from borrowing from the Federal Government to cover excessive unemployment compensation costs. This assertion is blatantly incorrect. Nothing in the terms of this amendment would prevent the Federal Government from granting such assistance. The beauty of this proposal is that it allows for fiscal flexibility. Congress is free to determine the substance of any spending programs. The amendment only requires that Congress may not adopt a planned budget deficit unless approved by a three-fifths vote of both Houses. Without the approval of three-fifths of Congress, legislators must go on record in favor of raising the taxes necessary to cover these costs. The amendment is simply designed to correct the strong institutional bias that leads to greater governmental spending that is desired by either the general populace or its elected representatives.

What is most ironic about the Post editorial is the contention that "State governments have been little consulted in the process thus far." In making this assertion the Post chooses to ignore the fact that much of the impetus for passage of this amendment comes from State legislators who reflect the will of the 80 percent of Americans who support this concept. At this time 31 State legislatures, only 3 short of the required 34, have petitioned Congress to call a constitutional convention to consider a balanced budget amendment. Additionally 42 States incorporate some form of a balanced budget or spending limitation requirement in their constitutions. In drafting the amendment embodied by Senate Joint Resolution 58 its sponsors drew largely upon similar measures which have been successfully implemented at the State level. I would suggest that in any further critique of this amendment, the Post pay due respect to the wisdom and experience of our State legislatures; the laboratories for democratic self-government in the United States.●

HUNTINGTON WOODS, MICH. CELEBRATES 50 YEARS

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on August 22, 1982, Huntington Woods, Mich., celebrates its 50th anniversary.

On this date in 1932, Huntington Woods was incorporated as a city, and since that date, it has continued to flourish as an ideal community.

The city of Huntington Woods truly embodies the best qualities of a community. It learns from its history while it prepares for its future. Throughout the more than 2,000 homes which line the quiet tree-lined streets and boulevards, there exist diverse, interested people. This is a community of keen community awareness and involvement.

Governmentally, Huntington Woods instituted, with its charter, the commissioner/manager plan for local government. This fine community can also boast of a highly successful public safety department, which is a combined police and fire department. This is but one branch of Huntington Woods' superb city services.

I am pleased to salute Huntington Woods, Mich., on this momentous occasion in its history and wish the community and its people the very best as they enter into the next 50 years.

A NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ARTHRITIS AND MUSCULOSKELETAL DISEASES

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to add my name to the list of cosponsors of S. 1939, a bill to establish a new National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal Diseases at the National Institutes of Health. This bill was introduced by my colleagues, Senator GOLDWATER and Senator CRANSTON, in December of last year, and has gained remarkable support over the recent months.

As chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, I have had the opportunity to learn a great deal about the National Institutes of Health. In March of this year, I introduced Senate bill 2311, the Biomedical Research, Training, and Medical Library Assistance Act Amendments. This bill reauthorizes the two largest Institutes at NIH—the National Cancer Institute and the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. The other nine Institutes, including the National Institute of Arthritis, Diabetes, Digestive, and Kidney Diseases, operate under the general authority of section 301 of the Public Health Service Act. In preparing for hearings on this bill, I learned of many successes and accomplishments of our biomedical research scientists at NIH and at the research institutions and medical schools funded by NIH grants and contracts. There is no doubt that the collective research effort conducted by NIH is unparalleled in the world. They have become firmly established as the premier research institute and their work has benefited not only our citizens, but also people throughout the world.

However, in preparing for this legislation, I also learned of many problems associated with NIH. As the budget for NIH has grown to almost $3.8 billion, the complexities and difficulties associated with efficient management have also increased. Unfortunately, some important areas of research seem to be insufficiently researched. One of the most obvious problems to me was that research devoted to the prevention, treatment, and cure of arthritis and musculoskeletal diseases has been insufficient and inadequate. I cited this in the introductory statement to hearings on S. 2311 in March of this year. When one considers the prevalence of these painful diseases and the economic loss due to disability, I believe it is imperative we improve our research effort in this area. At Senator GOLDWATER's request, I held hearings on S. 1939 on July 20th. During these hearings, we had ample opportunity to learn about the reasons for the proposed institute as well as concerns of research scientists and the administration regarding excessive administrative costs and the possibility of other requests to establish new Institutes at NIH.

This is a complex issue, and there are good arguments on both sides of the proposal. However, after spending months of gathering information related to this, and listening to the pros and cons, I support Senate bill 1939 and the establishment of the new Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal Diseases. I believe this will be the most effective means of giving the visibility and energy needed to find answers to the many kinds of arthritis and musculoskeletal disorders which afflict millions of Americans. However, to address the very legitimate concerns raised by opponents of this legislation, and the administration, that the administrative costs of establishing this new institute might actually diminish the current research effort, I strongly encourage that a $5 million sum be appropriated specifically for the establishment of this new Institute. I will be conveying this to my colleagues on the Senate Appropriations Committee and do everything I can to convince them that this relatively small additional appropriation is essential for a strong beginning of this new Institute. And I encourage all my colleagues who have joined in supporting S. 1939 to join with me to insure these necessary administrative costs are appropriated.

In addition to concerns about the administrative costs of a new Institute, the administration and other research scientists have made clear that to establish several other new Institutes may have a counterproductive effect on the overall research effort at NIH. Many have stated that the floodgates will be opened, and that special interest groups will devote considerable efforts encouraging Congress to restructure NIH by legislative mandate in the hopes that specific diseases or organ system research might be highlighted. I wish to insure that future changes at NIH are in the best interest of the overall research effort and the most efficient use of our taxpayers' dollars. Accordingly, when S. 2311 comes to the floor, I will propose to amend it by requiring a study be conducted over the next 18 months regarding any future administrative changes at NIH. I am proposing that the President's Health Council, which is authorized in S. 2311, conduct this study. This President's Health Council has been authorized for a one-time 18-month period in order that we might obtain a fresh look at NIH and for some external direction as to how we might prioritize our research and get the most out of our financial investment. It is timely that this panel address how we might better structure NIH in order to obtain the efficiency we all desire. At present, there is considerable disagreement and friction among research scientists and voluntary organizations representing patients with specific diseases regarding how NIH determines research priorities. In fact, much of the concern expressed to me and my staff was from individuals currently represented in the NIADDK Institute.

We have already learned of proposals to establish a new Diabetes Institute, recommendations on improving the research effort in digestive disorders, and of great concern that skin research is inadequate and poorly coordinated. Although the Federal dollar devoted to biomedical research has increased, the NIH budget has been constrained when compared to previous funding. Therefore, when competition for the Federal dollar is so intense, and is fueled by perceived inequities, it is imperative that we step back and thoughtfully consider how we might manage the biomedical research conducted at NIH in the most efficient and economic manner. Therefore, I will propose that any administrative changes other than S. 1939 be prohibited until the study is completed, within 18 months of enactment of this legislation. The results of the study will be made available to Congress and provide the basis for any future restructuring of the NIH. I believe this will provide a fair method of addressing concerns of multiple interest groups and insure equitable distribution of our Federal health dollar.

Now is the time to act on the mandate conveyed by the Arthritis Foundation—it is time we take arthritis seriously. The Institute proposed in S. 1939 will demonstrate that Congress has heard the concerns expressed by the millions of Americans who suffer from arthritis. I will do everything I can as chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, to insure that we find answers which will relieve pain, diminish disability, and hopefully cure these dreadful diseases.●

NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION'S STRATEGIC POLICIES

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I strongly support this resolution which calls on the President to provide the Senate with a comprehensive report on the administration's strategic policies and its commitment to abide by existing arms control agreements.

It is a sad day when a resolution such as this is necessary. However, over the course of more than a year-and-a-half in office, the President has been unwilling or unable to describe in any coherent fashion what he plans to do to reduce the possibility of a nuclear holocaust. Instead, we have seen emanating from the White House a string of illogical and dangerous assertions. For example, the President has argued that before we can agree to meaningful arms reductions we must gain clear strategic superiority over the Soviet Union. The key assumptions appear to be that a dramatic increase in our nuclear arsenal will somehow scare the Russians into freezing the development and deployment of new weapons and bargaining in good faith. Unfortunately, there is no historical basis for either contention. Rather, the history of the nuclear arms race is replete with examples of one side finding out that the only result of its attempt to gain a marginal strategic disadvantage is to spur its opponent to produce even more sophisticated and lethal weapons, thereby locking both into yet another round of this mindless and self-destructive game. The United States-Soviet nuclear arms spiral is, as Herbert York noted years ago, a race to oblivion. Those who argue that we will enhance our security by adding to the existing American and Russian stockpiles of 16,000 strategic and 34,000 tactical nuclear weapons are deluding themselves, the American people, and the citizens of the world. And yet that is exactly the line we have been hearing from senior administration officials since inauguration day of 1981.

This resolution provides the President with the opportunity to respond to the legitimate concerns that have been raised concerning all aspects of the administration's nuclear arms policy. Does the administration still contend that SALT II is "fatally flawed"? Is the President prepared to abrogate the ABM Treaty in order to pursue a ballistic missile defense scheme? Does the administration really believe dense pack is a viable basing mode for the MX that will increase nuclear stability? Why does the President want to renegotiate the limited test ban and peaceful nuclear explosion treaties? Does the President agree with those senior officials in the Defense Department who argue that a nuclear exchange would not necessarily have devastating effects on our physical and social environment, or on our political and economic systems? We deserve answer to these and other fundamental questions affecting the fate of this Nation and the world. I hope the President will respond positively to this resolution, and that in the process of drafting the report to the Senate he and his senior advisers will ponder the enormity and gravity of the consequences of the nuclear policy decisions they will make during their tenure.●

PRELIMINARY NOTIFICATION PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be prohibited by means of a concurrent resolution. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that such a notification was received on August 20, 1982.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of this preliminary notification at the offices of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room 4229, Dirksen Building.

The letter of notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., August 20, 1982.

Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. There was no objection.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I continue the pursuance of the resolution I have introduced seeking the impeachment of the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Paul Volcker. As I have said before, I have been denied any kind of acceptance on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary for looking into this matter of the resolution. I had no alternative but to then present the case to the full House. The rules of the House consider this resolution as a highly privileged one, and, of course, a very, very responsible and historic and awesome one. It is one of those resolutions going back to the mother parliament, steeped in the deepest and most ancient of history and precedent, and so, therefore, I certainly do this only after a great deal of very sober consideration over the course of years. This is not a sudden and abrupt decision.

As I have pointed out, and I do so now briefly by way of explanation, since I came to the Congress 20½ years ago, I was assigned to the Committee on Banking, and, therefore, have served my entire period as a Representative from the 20th District of Texas as a member of the standing committee known now as the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, but which historically had been known as the Committee on Banking and Currency.

At this point I would like to kind of bring up something that is very timely because of the action yesterday in the approval of the tax bill. The President urged, and the leaders of the Congress accepted, the argument that this tax bill was absolutely necessary in order to prevent the catastrophe of a record deficit for the Government and the people; and that therefore it would be a necessary implementation to reduce interest rates. We were told repeatedly all during yesterday's debate and before that through television, radio, through Presidential lobbying, through leadership of both parties lobbying, that the adoption of the tax bill would lead to lower interest rates. This is nothing but pure, undiluted hokum.

Interest rates started climbing before the tax bill, and there were two basic reasons which I have ad nauseam repeated. One, business conditions, economic conditions are simply horrible. They are terrible. Second, the Federal Reserve modified, changed its policy.

I must recall to the Members that I have said for years that I was completely demoralized by the lack of knowledge both on the congressional level as well as out generally, the lack of perception on the part of the leading, main economists that paraded before the committee as witnesses, the lack of accountability and also the enshroudment in obfuscation, double talk, on the part of the Federal Reserve Chairman and Board members that have appeared through the course of these 20½ years before the committee, everyone acting as if it was an act of God. "Why, it is the profligate Congesses, the spenders, that have brought us to this pass, and that is why interest rates are high."

But all of a sudden they find this as the most plausible reason for high interest rates when all along they have said, "Oh, no, there is nothing you can do about it, nothing the Fed can do about it, nothing the Government can do about it. It is kind of like an act of God."

Interestingly enough, in a big lead article in the Washington Post in the Outlook section of Sunday last, August 15, there is a lead article by the eminent economist, James Tobin, and it is entitled "Stop Volcker From Killing the Economy."

Now, when I said that for years I was labeled as sort of a kook or somebody that had a dagger out for the banking system and the Federal Reserve, and all the time all I was trying to say was that such things as interest rates, such things as monetary policy, were not acts of God; they were decisions made by men and problems created by men, and therefore certainly susceptible to solutions made by men and women. Now comes this eminent economist, and look at the words he uses. For the first time they borrow a phrase I have been using for 20 years when I said interest rates are not an act of God, and that is exactly what Mr. Tobin says. He says, "Interest rates are not acts of God. They are the direct result of the Federal Reserve monetary policy."

I would like to offer that article for the RECORD at this point, because I think it is unfortunately too late.

STOP VOLCKER FROM KILLING THE ECONOMY—A LESS STINGY FED WOULDN'T BRING A SURGE OF INFLATION

(By James Tobin)

The hour is late, the situation is critial. The president, the Congress, and the Federal Reserve Board can no longer postpone a basic reappraisal of their economic policies.

The summer's dismal business news makes it vividly clear that under current policies, significant and sustained economic recovery in 1982 and 1983 is improbable. Maybe the recession trough has been reached, maybe not. But a second dip is quite possible, or stagnation with minor wiggles, or at best a limping and fragile expansion. Responsible policymakers and rational politicians cannot afford to remain complacent.

As the prevalent gloom of business managers is confirmed by events, their pessimistic expectations reinforce high interest rates and other obstacles to recovery. Plant and equipment investment, whose stimulus was the principal objective of the "economic recovery" tax act of 1981, is a disaster; even projects already scheduled and budgeted are being cut back.

The seven previous post-war recessions were pretty short, averaging 10 months. They were reversed when inventory liquidation ran its course. Federal monetary and fiscal policies helped turn the tide. Widespread belief that recessions were only brief interruptions of normal growth sustained investment, home building, and consumer spending.

The current recession has severely shaken that faith, coming only 12 months after the previous trough in July 1980. And the significance of such faith should not be underestimated. When faith in recovery was destroyed in 1931, recession turned into depression.

Nevertheless, powerful voices within the administration and the Federal Reserve Board and on the outside oppose any significant change of policy.

Doctrinaire monetarists still contend that the way to pilot the U.S. economy is to hold the helm and engine revolutions steady, ignoring the actual course and speed. Anti-inflation hawks are not terribly dissatisfied with the economy's path anyway. Their overriding goal is conquest of inflation, which has indeed been reduced somewhat. Several years of economic distress, perhaps even a full presidential term, are just the regrettable but inescapable cost of beating inflation, they reckon. Under the redoubtable Margaret Thatcher, Britain has been paying the cost for three years; the promised benefits have yet to materialize.

Thatcherism may be American policy, too, but its author is not Ronald Reagan. It is Fed Chairman Paul Volcker. The president has never told the American people that recovery and prosperity must wait until inflation is expunged. Nor has the Congress, for sure. Maybe the president and Congress didn't understand the consequences when they blithely assigned the task of disinflation wholly to the Fed and went off on their "supply-side" spree. Now the consequences are clear for all to see, and elected officials cannot responsibly leave to the Federal Reserve alone policy choices so crucial to the economic health of the country and the world for years to come.

The Federal Reserve holds the key to recovery. High interest rates, above the inflation rate by unprecedented margins, are the source of the recession and remain the insurmountable barrier to recovery and prosperity. They are not an act of God. They are not the natural equilibrium of investment opportunities and saving propensities in America today—if they were, investment and economic activity would not be so depressed.

The Fed's money supply targets are just too stingy to finance a growing, prosperous economy. Bank deposits are the major constituent of "money." Banks, and now other depository institutions, are required to hold, in currency or on deposit in Federal Reserve Banks, reserves proportional to their own deposit liabilities. The Fed controls the aggregate supply of such reserves. The Fed keeps reserves in scarce supply, and banks pay high rates to obtain or borrow reserves. Consequently they charge high rates on business loans, consumer credit, and mortgages.

It really is that simple. And so is the antidote. The Fed can bring interest rates down by providing more reserves, letting bank credit and money supply expand faster than its present targets allow. Otherwise the prospects for recovery will remain dismal.

Yet a potent taboo inhibits adoption, indeed even consideration, of this obvious remedy. Even officials, politicians, and commentators who reject Thatcherism shy away from its antidote. They will the ends—lower interest rates and recovery—but not the means—easing of monetary policy.

The governing cliche is that easier monetary policy is a recipe for high inflation. Well, prices will almost surely be higher in 1984 if the next two years bring recovery than if the economy remains depressed. Prices do move with business activity; recovery would reverse many of the declines in the prices of goods that are particularly sensitive to a downturn in the economy, like foods, metals and oil. Those price reductions made for pleasant inflation statistics earlier this year, although they were produced by unpleasant developments like higher unemployment and interest rates and lower production. To say that some price increases in conjunction with a recovery are unacceptable is just to say that Volcker should continue to be cast as Thatcher, and recovery should be postponed indefinitely.

But there is no reason to expect a great new surge of inflation if we do get a real recovery. With 9.8 percent of the labor force and 30 percent of industrial capacity now idle, there is plenty of room and time for expansion without unleashing the classic inflationary pressures of excess demand—"too much money chasing too few goods"—throughout the economy. In circumstances like the present most new monetary spending will be absorbed in added production rather than in prices. Monetary expansion is not invariably and arithmetically inflationary.

To be sure, a change of course would involve the Fed in some awkward problems of public communication, mostly of its own making. In the Fed's more eclectic and pragmatic days, before it was so tightly locked in the monetarist vise, easing controls on the money supply in response to financial and economic crisis would not have surprised or alarmed anyone. Now the Fed has tied its own hands by committing itself to achieving specific money supply outcomes, regardless of what may happen to unemployment, production, etc.

The Fed's targets for growth in the money supply are set in terms of two basic measurements, called M-1 and M-2. M-1 measures cash in circulation, traveler's checks and all checking accounts at banks and other financial institutions. M-2 is broader. It adds to M-1 the deposits in money market funds, small-denomination time deposits and all deposits in savings accounts, and a few other categories.

The current Fed targets—announced last fall and reaffirmed in February—set target ranges for percentage growth in monetary aggregates for 1982 of 2.5 to 5.5 percent for M_1, 6 to 9 percent for M_2. However, in today's rapidly changing environment of financial technologies and regulations, the relation of these aggregates to national spending and income is quite variable.

This year, as the Fed itself has recognized, the spread of interest-bearing checking accounts (included in M_1 as well as M_2) and the precautionary psychology of the public have slowed the rise in turnover of M_1. That means the Fed's targets for growth in M_1, do not support as large a level in dollar spending as had been expected.

Evidently the monetary medicine has been more painful and debilitating than the Fed itself intended. Yet the targets remain sacrosanct. The only relief Volcker feels free to offer is to aim at the top of the range of targeted growth, to tolerate temporary overshoots if they are offset before year's end, and to refrain, tentatively, from setting 1983 targets below those of this year. But doctor, those are bandaids—the patient needs a transfusion!

The Fed has also limited its own flexibility by acquiescing in the monetarist convention of describing policy always in terms of money supply growth rates. This habit of thought could lead skeptical Fed-watchers to extrapolate to the long future a one-shot corrective burst of reserves and money creation, if there were one. Growth of M_1 at, say, 8 percent a year would indeed mean permanent inflation if continued indefinitely. But over the coming 12 to 18 months it would be no more than needed to bring interest rates down and to allow total spending and income in dollars to grow at 10 to 13 percent per year.

This would permit real GNP ro recover at a modest 4-6 percent annual rate, no more than reduce unemployment by 1-2 points, given ongoing inflation of 6 or 7 percent a year. Thereafter, as and when circumstances warrant, the Fed could again tighten up on money supply growth to prevent a resurgence of inflation.

The most constructive thing the Fed could do right now is to indicate its willingness and determination to support growth of GNP measured in current dollars of 10 to 13 percent per year through 1983, whatever this may imply for bank reserves, money supplies and interest rates. It is surely not beyond the wit of Paul Volcker to explain, or beyond the wit of his constituency to understand, that the Fed can rescue the economy and the financial markets now without abandoning its longer-run determination to limit monetary growth to non-inflationary rates.

It is often said that news of easier monetary policy would lead bond dealers, bond buyers, and lenders generally to raise interest rates in anticipation of higher inflation. In present circumstances this would be an irrational response to the kind of policy change envisaged.

Even if bond dealers and lenders were obtuse, they could not raise rates for long. Additional reserves supplied by the Fed would increase the lending capacities of banks and the public. They will not hold idle cash. They will find borrowers only at lower rates. Like the price of any commodity in oversupply, the cost of borrowing money would have to drop. The Catch-22 scenario by which interest rates rise whichever direction the Fed moves is a fairy tale designed to justify doing nothing.

Likewise, anyone so bewitched by primitive monetarism as to believe that new money will be wholly absorbed in higher prices and wages given the slack product and labor markets of 1982-83 would find these expectations refuted by events.

But what about those whopping budget deficits for the next several years? Isn't excessive federal borrowing the culprit for high interests rates and the obstacle to recovery?

Clarity on this question requires a moderate degree of subtlety, in particular distinction between deficits now and in 1983 and those in prospect for later and, one hopes, prosperous fiscal years.

This year's deficit is largely the result, not the cause, of the recession and of the high interest rates that have depressed the economy.

Every extra point of unemployment raises the deficit some $30 billion, by losses of tax revenues and automatic increases of outlays. Moreover, high interest rates directly raise the deficit by adding to the cost of federal debt service about $7 billion per point.

Defense spending and the tax cuts enacted in 1981 begin to be significant sources of deficit in the coming fiscal year. But recent upward revisions of the estimated FY 1983 deficit, by the Congressional Budget Office and other forecasters, reflect mainly more pessimistic projections of economic activity and interest rates.

Deficit-reducing measures, whether tax increases or expenditure cuts, might indeed lower interest rates. But in present circumstances, with monetary policy unchanged, they would do so only by making a weak economy still weaker. There is no way to enjoy both lower interest rates and economic recovery without an easing of monetary policy.

The large deficits in prospect for 1984, 1985 and subsequent years, even if the economy is prospering, are a different matter. Anticipation that they will crowd out private borrowers or that the Fed will be forced to monetize them may be raising longer-term interest rates today. That is why I and others urged earlier this year an "Accord of 1982," under which easing of monetary policy today and correction of future budgets would be simulataneously agreed and announced. That is still a good idea.

Can nothing be done to relieve the paralyzing fear that recovery supported by accommodative monetary policy will reignite inflation? As this risk inhibits policy for recovery today, so it will tomorrow and tomorrow. It will continue to do so even though inflation subsides further in a depressed and stagnant economy. Something can be done, and now is the right time.

Price and wage guideposts could assure continued disinflation even while employment and production improve. Given the dismal markets they now face, both business and labor should find a package combining guideposts with expansionary policy an attractive bargain. From 1961 to 1965, after two recessions back to back in 1957-58 and 1960, such a package brought a strong and durable recovery free of inflation. Today compliance with guideposts could be induced by tax credits for workers and employes—so-called tax-based incomes policy, TIP. Incomes policies do entail costs, inefficiencies and inequities; but these are small compared to the massive economic damage of protracted stagnation. The first requirement of a guide-post policy is presidential leadership in building the supportive consensus, and that of course is an unlikely departure from the administration's ideology.

The hardships we are suffering are not inevitable. They are made in Washington. Better policies are at hand. Those who reject them should not be allowed to take refuge in the plea that they have no choice.

What would I have given if Professor Tobin had come out with this even a year ago? It would have made a big difference. But what more would I have given if he had come out 10 years ago, 15 years ago, in 1965, when I first wrote President Johnson and could not get any kind of interest whatsoever.

So, I think the RECORD should reflect this article because it is analyzing correctly, but for the first time officially from an economist from that level, the top level. Economists have always intrigued me. Experts, I learned after I left the city council of San Antonio to go to the State Senate, and especially after I got up here, experts are the ones that you least must trust. They turn out to be, in most cases, amazingly, abysmally wrong and ignorant.

As a matter of fact, the first year that I was assigned to the Banking Committee, things were so easygoing then that the entire Banking Committee had only three full meetings during that whole year. But the second year, in 1963, we had the preeminent Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Dillon, who was supposed to be an expert, and he came before us to ask that we repeal the Silver Transactions Tax. Nobody seemed to much care to ask what it was all about, but since Chairman Patman had just assumed the chairmanship, I was able to be recognized as a sort of a lowly freshman to ask a few questions. I asked Mr. Dillon if it was not true that the reason we had the Silver Transactions Tax was that it was put in there particularly at the inception of World War II in order to control or avoid speculation. He answered in a namby pamby way and said, well, the history of the tax was that it was a wartime tax and that it was long overdue to be done away with.

I said, "Well, then why do you wait until this point in time to ask for it?"

So, then he came out and for the first time admitted that the silver market had pressures because, he said, of industrial use, a highly exponential rise in the volume of use of silver for industrial purposes. But then I asked him what impact that would have on our currency, fractional currency that had as a monetary base of silver.

He said, "Oh, no, we have enough as far as the Treasury is concerned."

I said, "Well, what would you consider enough? If you say these tremendous pressures are building up, you have got to do away with the tax. What I see is that you are going to open the speculative market in silver first, and second, it must be in obedience to the fact that you want a desire to increase the availability and the flow of that metal."

I said, "But I can't see how that will fail from having an impact on our coinage."

He denied it strongly. His recommendation went through. I believe I was the only one voting negative, at least on the committee level. He came in less than 2 years later, in 1965, in April, to ask that we demonetize our coinage, removing silver and providing for what we now see as the clad coinage.

So, you can see why, when anybody points out an expert, that I am very, very skeptical, and you would think I was from Missouri. I say, "Show me."

Coming back to this question that has been raised because of the big argument on the tax matter, which was directly tied into this question of interest rates and the question of solvency and balancing of budgets and deficits and the like, the deficit of the Federal Government will not go down because of this tax bill. As a matter of fact, it will rise, and it will rise to more than $150 billion in fiscal year 1983, which begins October 1.

□ 1215

The tax bill merely made a little dent in what is surely and certainly a catastrophe, as I tried my best to evoke and define last week.

If we are talking about the relationship of Federal financing needs, that is to interest rates and their rise or fall, then this argument about the deficit is false. There is not an economist in the country who says that the economy is looking forward to a strong recovery.

Why do they say this? The reason is interest rates, under almost any forecast will remain at historically high levels.

What do we mean by historically high levels? It depends on the point of view.

According to the President, who is now taking credit for having had the prime interest rate dropped to 14 percent, and the Federal Reserve takes credit for that also, and clearly admits then that it does have control of that policy.

You see, it is very human. I think President Kennedy said defeat is an orphan, victory has a thousand fathers.

So here they are trying to take credit for what, 14 percent? That is a gift to the American people? It is still usurious, it is still extortionate, it is still criminal to impose that kind of ordeal on the engines of commerce and business and the little taxpayer who is trying to save money, which incidentally this tax bill will tax.

So we are going around in circles again, all because both the President and the leaders and those majority Members of the Congress do not want the responsibility, they do not want the responsibility of what I call the sacrament of decision. As I have said repeatedly since last year, that sacrament of decision can no longer be avoided.

The only thing is that it will be brought only under an environment of crisis, of chaos, and as everybody knows, that is the worst time in which to soberly legislate or use judicious and knowledgeable discretion.

What is the sacrament of decision that I speak of? Given the importance, given the greatness of our country, given what is at stake in our country today, I parallel it to the decision that we read about in the scriptures with the prophet Elijah. If you recall, when he asked the Hebrews, who were beginning to worship a false god, he said, "Who is the true God, yours or mine, the One, the Ancient?" They said, "Well, let us test it. We will make a decision."

Elijah said, "Let us test it." He summoned forth, he asked the worshipers of the false god to summon their god, to do something on a sacrificial altar. They called forth and nothing happened.

Then the scripture says that Elijah called forth and said, "You, the true God, I summon." And he did, with fire and a flash of fire and burned that sacrificial matter on the altar.

"That is a true God." And all the Hebrews said, "Yes, that is a true God."

Today what is the true issue? The issue is whether we are going to be reaffirming the basic tenants of our creed of government as envisioned in the first words in the preamble of the Constitution. This is the issue. The issue is whether or not the American people are going to continue to let the bankers, the predatory, the self-seeking, the greedy, the insatiable interests control the economic welfare, the fiscal and monetary policies of this great Nation and great people, or whether the people are going to do it as it is envisioned and has been all along, and was carefully protected by those men who were serving in the Continental Congress. The issue goes back to the very beginning. This was an issue in the first Continental Congress.

Governments are what pass for governments, and those were the first efforts for a national government in our history. They had to have bankers, and that was a big issue. So they finally chartered a bank in Philadelphia and called it the Bank of North America, and that immediately became the issue.

Who is going to issue the people's money? What are going to be the terms? What are going to be the interest rates?

Do you not know that the bankers then were like the bankers today and the bankers have been all along and always will be, except that today we are in the hands of such tremendous forces that they transcend the power of any national government on Earth to control them.

More decisions are made by those 20 meeting in Brussels every year, privately—they decide such fate as what is going to be the standard of living of Americans—than are made in this Congress or made by the President. This is all because the people have let go control of what the Constitution says is their sovereignty.

After all, as I have said ad nauseum, the first words of our Constitution are the most radical, even today. What do they say? They say we, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, et cetera. It does not say we, the Congress, I, the President, we, the judges, the three branches of our Government. It says we, the people. That is where the sovereignty is. This is where we all come from. This is what we must account to.

But you have not had it because of what has been done since the adoption of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913.

I am not going to go into that because I have gone into that already in the past, and I think it would be repetitious. But that is our decision. That is the sacrament of this decision, whether we are going to reaffirm our faith in the people's ability to govern themselves or whether we are going to believe like this present President, that the Government is something separate and is to be distrusted, and is to be dismantled, and that that is the source of our problem. We are the source of our problems, in effect. This is what our President said in his inaugural speech when he said the enemy is the Government. I cannot believe it. We have Congressmen saying the same thing.

This misses the fundamental premise about what we are all about in America, and nowhere are we at a greater crisis than the fact that we are now prostrate. I think, as I have said before, that when we reach a sorry stage where such issues as war and peace are being decided by these bankers, every single issue that has come up and is coming up now.

Look what is happening down in Mexico right now. It has the potential for catastrophe. Today's papers bring out the fact, and I made a speech on this last week when it had just broken out and nobody has reflected that up here. But today's paper shows that the U.S. Treasury, the taxpayers had to ante up $1 billion to try to shore up Mexico.

I am not saying that is wrong. I am saying what caused it? The bankers. These $1 billion are going down there to shore the Mexican Government so that they will not default to the Chase Manhattan Bank, First City National, and the rest, and a few others outside of the United States. They are the ones that have bankrolled what everybody has boasted about, this tremendous development of gas and oil in Mexico.

That was all bankrolled with an initial $2.1 billion loan by Chase Manhattan and a few others. They are so squeamish that the Mexican Government, and I have said that I was the only one bringing this out just a couple of months ago, came out and purchased two of our destroyers as scrap, even though they came off of the active duty list of the destroyers that we have.

Why? Mexico has always prided itself in not seeking a standing army of any consequence.

Why? We made a secret deal, which I exposed for the first time last December, even though the deal had been made earlier than that, and we let Mexico have about a dozen or more F-5's. We are going to let Venezuela have about 14 F-16's.

Why? What is the reason?

It seems to me, in view of what happened in the Falklands, that if a repetiton of that happens further north, elsewhere, are we going to be facing those planes, those destroyers?

□ 1230

I raised a question. I said, "What does Mexico want the destroyers for? Is it so that they can get more of our shrimp boats when the time comes?"

And, of course, nobody has answered that. Why? Well, the reason comes back to this, just like the case of Poland. Same thing. The bankers made the decision, and they continue to. Just like the deal that finally, under great pressure, Mr. Reagan made with Mr. Volcker. In exchange for yesterday's tax bill, the Feds would modify their policy, in order to see if the day could be saved, if the thing could be patched, at least to let it limp until the election in November.

I think this is a sorry way. It is a lamentable way for a great and noble people, a great country, the greatest on the Earth. There is no more humanitarian people or Government in this whole Earth than the American Government, notwithstanding all of the critics to the contrary, I think the people deserve better than that.

There are things, of course, little by little coming out. I wanted to offer another article that appeared Friday, today, August 20, page D2 of the New York Times, by Leonard Silk, who is an economist but also a writer on economics and financial matters. It is entitled "A Reappraisal After the Binge." The binge he refers to is the fluctuations of the stock market. But among other things he says, and I want to quote from that:

A REAPPRAISAL AFTER THE BINGE

Wall Street's explosion this week has raised hopes that, if stocks are rising the resurgence of the national economy cannot lag far behind.

But there is wild irony in the picture: The forecasts of lower interest rates that triggered the stock market's upsurge were based on gloomy analyses of the overall business outlook.

For example, Henry Kaufman of Salomon Brothers said the economy was "straitjacketed by financial blockages and fear of international competition." Albert M. Wojnilower of the First Boston Corporation said flatly that "the business outlook has deteriorated"—capital spending plans had been slashed again, consumption had fallen and inventories had resumed piling up, both at wholesale and retail. The July 1 tax cut, he said was more like a life preserver thrown to a struggling swimmer than extra stimulus to an economy already at the point of lift-off.

Yet Wall Street cheered wildly, focusing only on the prediction of declining interest rates. Secretary of the Treasury Donald T. Regan, a Wall Streeter transported to Washington, was exuberant too: He refused to look a gift horse in the mouth. A rally was a rally and an enormous rally was an enormous rally. He expressed his appreciation to Mr. Kaufman for his help, but said he was right for the wrong reason: The real cause for Wall Street's upsurge was its recognition that the Reagan Administration had restored stability to the economy, Mr. Regan contended.

Yesterday, waking up after its two-day binge, Wall Street seemed less sure, wondering whether it had not overdone things. The gloomy economic forecasts—and the current reality of weak business conditions, declining profits and high unemployment—were still staring it in the face.

It was not, after all, just Mr. Kaufman and Mr. Wojnilower who had turned sour on the recovery just before the stock market exploded, but the vast majority of other economists as well. Robert J. Eggert, president and chief economist of Eggert Economic Enterprises, had reported on Aug. 10 that the earlier, modestly exuberant outlook for the "after-the-tax-cut" third quarter had faded among the 44 economists polled for his Blue Chip composite forecast. They expected interest rates to continue to decline. (It is curious how Wall Street tends to disparage the consensus of economists while preferring to follow one bellwether sheep, a role in which Mr. Kaufman has been cast.)

Alan Greenspan, president of Townsend-Greenspan and a frequent White House adviser, had just declared, on Aug. 13, that "The recovery is still not here," noting that the outlook for 1982-83 "has continued to deteriorate since our last forecast." Builders, he said, were holding out little hope for any significant near-term recovery; business orders for capital equipment were falling; consumer confidence was low and bankruptcies, already at a post-Depression record, were becoming "a problem rather than just a risk in the outlook."

Albert H. Cox, Jr., the president of Merrill Lynch Economics Inc., a subsidiary of Treasury Secretary Regan's old firm, had just warned that the Reagan Administration and Reaganomics might be headed for a major setback in the November elections because "too little has been accomplished thus far, and strategic errors have been made."

Hope springs on a moment's notice in Wall Street, but there is good reason to wonder whether the resurgence of the stock market earlier this week (even if it was overdone) does not mark an important turning point in the course of the economy. There has been a drawing back from the brink just before the economy crashed over it. And belief is rising that the economy will survive the mistakes of the past, now that they are being repaired.

Lower interest rates, brought on not just by weak loan demand but by significant changes in the Administration's fiscal policy and the Federal Reserve's monetary policy, should provide major support for economic recovery.

The decline in long-term rates as well as short rates should help lift housing out of its deep slump. The strengthening bond market should help arrest the fall in business investment in plant and equipment, although, given the heavy hangover of excess capacity, it will take months before capital spending recovers. High unemployment will still be a drag on consumer spending, but gains in take-home pay from the net tax cut (even if the tax-increase bill before Congress passes), higher Social Security benefits and, most important, a gradual rise in output and income as inventory cutting fades will put more money into consumers' pockets and increase their outlays.

Strengthening financial markets are likely to give a psychological lift not only to Wall Street and Washington but to many consumers and businesses around the country.

All the economy's woes have not vanished overnight. The international financial picture, with Mexico now rising to the top of the worry list, remains especially serious.

But Wall Street's burst of action this week suggests that the new Great Crash is not at hand. And if Congress supports the White House move to produce a more prudent fiscal policy and the Fed continues to work for lower interest rates, the recovery may soon get under way.

"Lower interest rates, brought on not just by weak loan demand"—meaning that business is rotten—"but by significant changes in the administration's fiscal policy and the Federal Reserve's monetary policy"—that is, the administration's tax, it is $99 billion, and the Fed's change of policy—"should provide major support for economic recovery."

On the other hand, nobody takes note—Tobin, Silk, all of the experts you read about—that what has happened is irreparable. I do not care if interest rates go down to 6 percent. We are in a mess we cannot reverse now. I was hopeful a year ago, when I first started talking, that maybe, just maybe, we could get some attention. Not action—I know better than to expect that—but just some attention which in turn would bring some, a little bit, recognition of what ultimately is going to have to be faced and resolved.

But I must admit I failed until a week ago, 10 days ago, when finally the pressure came up and the Fed had to make a deal and the President had to beg for a deal. And the Fed, as usual, said, "Well, you get a tax measure, and we will modify." Because also their banking system is going under.

You know, the Federal Reserve is not a governmental entity. It is called Federal, but it is not. It is, essentially, the private bankers of the country, but who in turn are really responsive to just a handful. No more than about five or six superbanks actually determine what the Federal policy is going to be, and particularly since the creation of the Open Market Committee, the biggest gimmick ever known to man.

No European wants to believe that Americans conduct and continue to conduct their fiscal and monetary policies the way we do. We are the only ones, as I said, in the world, industrial nation or otherwise, that handle our money the way we do, the people's money, the Treasury.

The legal title of the Federal Reserve is that it is the fiscal agent of the U.S. Treasury. That is what it is. We do not have the equivalent of what these other governments call a central bank. The nearest we have to it is the Federal Reserve. But it does not mean that it is a Government entity. But it is a creature of the Congress, though. That is why I said these things are not acts of God. The Federal Reserve Board is not an autonomous Government superior to the Presidency and the legislative branch, the first branch of the Government under the Constitution. It should be amenable. It is a creature of the Congress. Congress created it. But it is not. It does not respond to Congress.

I have brought out in my specific charges in my bill of particulars on the bill of impeachment, in the last one last week when I placed in the RECORD the complete report by the firm of Fulbright and Jaworski and the counsel, Alan B. Levenson, that was called in to do an inhouse investigation of what I had charged was a leak from the Federal Reserve Open Market Committee that resulted in tons of dollars of windfall, illegal profit, because they got that through the manipulation of their moneys by having advance notice of what that decision was, which would not be announced for several weeks by the Open Market Committee, and that was the Hanover Manufacturers Trust Bank of New York.

So I finally had enough saliva—there is an old Mexican saying, "El que mas saliva tiene mas pinole trag"—he who has the most saliva is the one that can eat the most pinole. Pinole is a crushed powder like candy from the seeds of a certain palm tree that grows in Mexico. You cannot eat much of it because it drys up your saliva. So the saying coming from the people is that he who has the most saliva will eat the most pinole.

So finally, by just trying to bring pressure and yelling, the chairman of our committee finally summoned forth Mr. Volcker, and we said, "How about these rumors, what about these leaks?"

He said, "Oh, no such thing."

I tried to get a question in, "Do you have an Inspector General?" Nobody knows.

The Congress cannot get the General Accounting Office to go and look at the Feds. They are independent. They do not allow that. We have tried to get a bill through our committee. For years Chairman Patman, may his soul rest in peace, struggled. I was one of those who staunchly supported him. We found ourselves almost isolated. We tried to command an independent audit of the Federal Reserve Board. To this day, you cannot get it. They said, "Oh, we audit ourselves. We have sufficient audits."

So they brought in a special counsel. But from where? From the law firm of Fulbright and Jaworski. Mr. Levenson. You know, there is nothing like having a friendly counsel. He came to the conclusion that you can read in the RECORD of last week, because I placed a full report in here, and you can see, you do not have to be an expert, you do not have to be a lawyer, you do not have to be a financier, you do not have to be a Ph. D., you can see that it was one of the most thoroughgoing whitewash jobs that we have any record of.

The funny thing is that I did not even know they had prepared a report until I started raising the question months ago. And finally I got it, just a couple of weeks ago. But it is in the RECORD, and I think the citizens can see. That is part of the bill of particulars with which I am charging Mr. Volcker specifically as being not only susceptible but long overdue for impeachment. After all, that is the reason for such a legislative process, is impeachment—unfortunately. The common opinion is, even among Congressmen, that it is something you reserve for Presidents, or that it is a quasi-judicial or criminal procedure. Well, of course, it has the trappings of some judicial function inasmuch as you have a recital of facts that must be interpreted.

Now, I certainly think that I have raised, up to now, three very specific charges besides the general charges, which ought to satisfy the requirements of the Constitution as to impeachment and a resolution seeking impeachment. Impeachment means charges. It does not mean judgment or conviction or trying. And I think that I cannot regret too much and constantly the fact that the Judiciary Committee, which is the proper committee—I believe in going through channels, and this is why I am speaking today, because the Federal Reserve Board is arrogant, it denies any accountability to either the Congress or the President, and yet it has this fateful power. They now admit "Oh, yes, there is a cause and effect between Federal policy and interest rates."

Now, you know, when they want to take credit. But what is it they are trying to make us feel grateful for? We still have a problem.

If interest rates were to go below 10 percent, the problem remains unsolved, and you cannot build the destruction that has occurred in the last 1½ years. Businesses have been going out at a record every week in the last 6 months. More businesses have been going out; that is, bankrupt, than even during the Depression.

The banking system. The other day Mr. Volcker appeared, and he appeared only because we passed the so-called monetary policy assessment requirement, a little old sort of Milquetoast resolution. This was a compromise that we finally got on our efforts to get accountability from the Federal Reserve a few years ago. The big compromise was that the Federal Reserve chairman would come before us periodically to report on monetary policy and goals. And then they use all of this jargon, all of this jiggery pokery about M-1, M-2, and M-3, and all of that ridiculous talk, just to obfuscate, no other purpose. So he came in the other day under the requirements of that act. The big issue was the failure, the first complete collapse, of a bank since the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, in Oklahoma, the Penn Square. And we had known and we have known for a year, when we brought the regulators, who also refused to give us specifics—and there is no way we can make them. The Comptroller of the Currency, for example, who is supposed to oversee the banks, issues the charters, and the like, he is not accountable to the Congress. Believe it or not. Now, how many people know that the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency is really not a U.S. Comptroller of the Currency? He is financed. The Congress, the Government, does not appropriate money for the purposes of the Comptroller of the Currency's office. Rather, he operates his office from the fees he gets from the banks. So who is he looking after? The banks, of course. Just like the Federal Reserve Board.

One of the charges, by the way, and parenthetically speaking, that I have, the second one, in the bill of particulars, was the secret meeting that the Chairman, Paul Volcker, had with the president of the First City National, Walter Wrisdon, and that great Nelson Bunker Hunt of Texas, the multibillionaire speculator of silver, secretly in Florida.

Now, what Congressman can arrange a secret meeting with the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board? Not even the committee. What little ordinary banker can arrange to consult? But Mr. Wrisdon had no problems with Nelson Bunker Hunt, who had just collapsed over $15 to $20 billion of bank credit in trying to corner what? The silver market.

Remember what I told you about the history of the abolition or the repeal of the silver transaction tax? You see, it all ties in. And I feel a great responsibility because I am charged with knowledge. I have had some letters from people as far away as Oregon. Incidentally, the people are there. This has brought the greatest reaction that I have ever had to any action or activity I have participated in in my history as a publicly elected official, whether city councilman, State senator, or U.S. Congressman. And people know. Politicians up here and Presidents underestimate people. The American people are way ahead. They are way ahead of us all. And they know. The only thing they feel is that there is not much they can do about it. They are frustrated. But they know. And they are there.

All we have to do is give them the opportunity and do what the whole theory of our system says that we ought to do.

But when I asked Mr. Volcker, I said, how many Penn Squares do you have out there in that wild blue banking yonder?

He always had a cigar. He paused, blew smoke, smiled, and said he did not know. This is your chief regulator, the Comptroller of the Currency. As I said, he does not feel he has to answer; none of them have. Every Comptroller, like every Chairman of the Federal Reserve that I have ever seen or heard come before the committee, in fact we had one that openly defied the committee in the sixties and he was a fellow Texan. He said, "You all don't pay us. The Congress doesn't appropriate the money. The bankers pay their fees for us to audit them or oversee them, so that is where our money comes from."

Well, you know, as ancient as mankind is the fundamental saying, it is still true today more than ever in these Congresses since the advent of the Political Action Committees, and that is that he who pays the fiddler calls the tune; so if the Comptroller knows that his bread is being buttered by the private bankers that he is supposed to be looking to and regulating, you know what is going to happen. Let us not kid ourselves. Who is kidding whom?

Now, the Penn Square thing revealed clearly the abysmal failure of our regulatory system and accountability; but at no time did these regulators ever come and say, well, you know, this is the number.

I would ask, "What is the number of your problem banks or problem S. & L.'s?"

They would not say, but we know and I have good reason to know.

I do not care if this interest rate goes to 10 percent. It is too late.

There is also another saying that is so true, "golpe dado ni dios lo quita," "A blow once struck even God cannot remove." You are hit, and this is unfortunately the tragedy. These big experts are talking as if this kind of thing, extortionate, usurious interest rates, are something that you can flagellate a country with and then turn it off and turn it on at will, and that is such a fatal error because you cannot repair that which has already gone under. There is no way you can resurrect the thousands of businesses that have gone under just in the last 6 months, no way. They are gone. You have people unemployed. There will not be one more person employed today. In fact, you will have more unemployment than before the passage of the tax bill, the reduction temporarily of the prime interest rate to 14 percent, and to think that these big shots, Roosevelt called these malefactors of great wealth, should think that the American people are so gullible, that the Members of Congress are so ignorant and helpless that they do know they are being insulted when they say, "You ought to be grateful. Look what we have done. We have reduced this to 14 percent."

What an infamy. What a sorry day of shame.

For this reason, at this point, I would like to offer for the RECORD a news item in the New York Times of Thursday, August 12, this year, entitled "Business Failures Rise." It says, "Business failures last week rose 44.6 percent."

BUSINESS FAILURES RISE

Business failures last week rose 44.6 percent from a year ago, reversing a brief decline and remaining at a 50-year high, a private credit-information service reported today.

The corporate casualty count of 512 in the week ended Aug. 5 compared with 354 failures in the corresponding week a year ago, the Dun & Bradstreet Corporation reported.

Failures were also up sharply from the previous week, when the 343 failures reported were off slightly from the 346 of a year earlier.

Businesses have been failing at an average of 454 a week so far this year, compared with an average 316 a week in the same period of 1981, and the highest since the weekly average of 612 in 1932.

Dun & Bradstreet said 14,067 businesses failed through Aug. 5, up from 9,808 in the same 1981 period.

Previous to that, even Leonard Silk says because of the administration's policy, the administration has gone along. The President did not protest high interest rates. Just like his predecessor, President Carter, he did not say anything until October 1980 on the eve of the election.

Well, you know, the American people know better. I am just telling you, the American people are smart. They are not that dumb. They know who is for and who is against.

Anyway, from time to time in trying to contradict that there was something that could be done, you had the Secretary of the Treasury first coming out and saying, "I'm coming out and reviewing plans to restrict the Federal Reserve because of high interest rates." That was on Sunday, June 20 in the New York Times; but then, lo and behold, there is a follow up story on Tuesday, June 22, 1982, and it says Regan—I think he pronounced it Reagan—"Secretary Regan softens his call for review of the Fed":

REGAN SOFTENS HIS CALL FOR REVIEW OF THE FED

WASHINGTON, June 21.—Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, while continuing to criticize the Federal Reserve Board's handling of the nation's money supply, said today that he sees little need now to bring the Fed under more direct control of the Administration.

Mr. Regan, in a speech to the National Association of Accountants and in comments later, acknowledged that the Treasury is studying options for limiting the independence of the Fed, including bringing the Fed within the Treasury or putting the Treasury Secretary on the Federal Reserve Board. But he immediately sought to soften the impact of his remarks.

"I'm studying these things," he said. "I have no preconceived notions. I don't think there probably is much need for change in the Fed." Then, in a later news conference, he said: "At this point, I think the Fed's independence is a good thing."

Mr. Regan's remarks came after Treasury officials over the weekend said that the Secretary was seeking review of proposals to limit the independence of the Fed because of his continued annoyance with what he calls its "erratic" money policy. Mr. Regan has contended that this erratic growth contributed to high interest rates.

Mr. Regan's backtracking today is another example of a pattern within the Administration of attacking the Fed one day, only to retreat soon afterward. Officials at the Treasury suggested that the purpose of such attacks was to put pressure on the Fed to work harder to smooth out the weekly and monthly fluctuations in the money supply.

At the same time today, Mr. Regan sought to play down the importance of his announcement that the Administration is reviewing various economic policy options in case the hoped-for recovery does not get under way.

"I've always felt that you should be ready for any contingency," Mr. Regan said in the afternoon news conference. And in his speech, he said, "We are not advocating any new initiatives by virtue of undertaking this study." He added later, "You may find the best course is to do nothing."

David A. Stockman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, in comments to reporters, also sought to minimize the importance of any review.

"No fundamental revision of policy is at all likely," Mr. Stockman said. "Any basic revision is not in the cards at all."

But while Mr. Regan sounded conciliatory, he continued to criticize the Fed.

"We like the policies but not the way the policies have been carried out," he said. "We believe that smoother growth of the money supply will lead to lower interest rates."

And in his speech he said: "The Fed's money growth has been anything but steady. The ups and downs have bred uncertainty in every quarter. And it's time we started asking some hard questions about just how the Fed implementation of policy os working."

In his news conference, Mr. Regan mentioned the same changes in Fed operations that the Administration has been pushing and the Fed has been resisting, including contemporaneous reserve accounting, a floating discount rate and more attention to the monetary base growth rate.

Now, who is trying to kid whom?

So we come back to the fundamental question and the reasons underlying the efforts I am making. I am going to continue to make the case of the impeachment resolution on the House floor. At the proper time, I will be summoning it forth.

As I told you before, this is a privileged resolution. In other words, I am not just kidding. I am not doing this just for effect. I had a letter from a person I think in Oregon saying, "Oh, you are very courageous." I do not think so.

I mean, I have gotten into some real good fights in my career back home, probably meaner than anyone else. I have even been shot at. I have been assaulted. I was almost killed in Boulder, Colo., for nothing else than trying to exercise free speech at a peaceful assembly.

I did not see any of the civil right groups or anybody protesting. I think I am the only American that has ever had storm trooper tactics used against him to prevent him from speaking under the threat to serious bodily injury or death.

Yes, during the Vietnam era you had a lot of people heckled and then they withdrew, but none were physically prevented; but I was on August 8, 1973, in Boulder, Colo; so that I do not think it is a particular mark of courage.

What would take courage, what would take gall and nerve would be for me to remain silent, because I have had the privilege to serve on this committee for 20 years. This is what I am saying. This is the way it looks to me. I am coming out and saying it.

I thought that I would be entitled to have the processes work and have the Committee on the Judiciary do it thoroughly and expertly because they have the staff and they have the resources. I do not. I do not have any staff available to me to handle this matter. I have been doing this alone and with some help that has been forthcoming from one of my greatest staff members, the best I could ever have, but who is so bogged down with the work that he is responsible for that I cannot delegate him to this. It would not be right; but it is not because I think that it is a way to get publicity. I have never had any reason to lack publicity. This would not be the way I would choose to try to get it. It is because I consider this to be the inescapable No. 1 issue, the $64 question, as my generation used to say in the days of radio with old Colonel Bowes or Major Bowes.

I think that there is so much here that goes to the heart of the continuing thing that we call the American way, that it would take nerve and I would think that it would really be cowardice not to speak out. If I am wrong, I can be judged. I am speaking out. If I am right, then I have all the more reason why I should continue.

I will continue with the bill of particulars on future occasions and when I have fully rounded out the bill of particulars and the general provisions of my resolution of impeachment, I fully intend to bring it up and the reason I am going into all this is so that the Members will have an opportunity to analyze for themselves just as if they had been members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. DYSON.

THE PRESIDENT'S BEIRUT DECISION DESERVES OUR SUPPORT

(Mr. DYSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, just this morning President Reagan announced his decision to commit 800 U.S. Marines to West Beirut. This major foreign policy decision comes in the wake of many weeks of tragic conflict—a conflict which has brought incalculable damage to this region of the world and to the families who once occupied it. Somehow we must end the senseless tragedy which continues to devastate the Middle East.

The President's decision deserves our support. Undertaken together with the French and Italian nations, this action follows complex and forthright negotiations of all parties to bring about a peaceful solution to the evacuation of the PLO.

The President is sending American troops for the sole purpose of assisting in the evacuation of the PLO in accordance with the final agreement worked out by Mr. Habib. These troops will be stationed in the Port of West Beirut, outside of the battle-torn areas in Lebanon.

The peaceful evacuation of the PLO is critical to any future attempts to achieve a broader peace in the Middle East. Some fear we may find ourselves in a deeper entanglement by sending these American troops. I do not think we can refrain from taking this absolutely necessary step which offers the best hope for a peaceful solution to this most recent chapter in this volatile region.

CONGRESSMAN HUGHES INTRODUCES TAX REFORM LEGISLATION

(Mr. HUGHES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a measure that I believe will greatly simplify the Nation's tax laws and bring them closer to the national interest.

I and a majority of my colleagues supported the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 yesterday because I felt it was in the best interest of the country. The Nation urgently needs the reduced deficit that will result from increased revenues, and I believe the bill eliminates many of the loopholes created by last year's tax package.

Despite the much-needed tax reforms addressed by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act, however, the withholding provisions are troublesome. I believe they will only result in unnecessary cost and paperwork burdens on financial institutions and corporations. It is not withholding that is needed to insure taxpayer compliance, but better use of information on interest and dividends, much of which is already provided on 1099 forms. Taxpayer compliance in reporting interest and dividend income is already remarkably high, at a 96.7 percent compliance rate. The provisions outlined in the tax package will result in a nominal increase in compliance, but at the same time will require millions of new forms to be processed. This paperwork is clearly unreasonable.

I regret that the real impact of the 10-percent withholding provisions will not come from better compliance but rather from speeding up collections by the IRS. Many taxpayers have more than their fair share of taxes withheld from income during the tax year. Requiring withholding on dividends and interest will only complicate this matter further, resulting in the Federal Government holding more than its fair share from taxpayers and requiring larger refund to individuals at the end of the year. Clearly, the projected revenue gain resulting from this provision is overstated and illusory.

In conclusion, the interest and dividend withholding provisions are an extremely costly way to improve compliance from a very small group of individuals. There are far less burdensome ways to achieve this same goal.

My bill will maintain the many progressive reforms of the tax package while eliminating this troublesome provision, which has raised the deepest concern of many Members.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). The Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 58 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

□ 1430

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PRICE) at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6863) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 6, 17, 24, 41, 42, 43, 45, 58, 60, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 69, 84, 86, 91, 97, 98, 112, 117, 119, 132, 138, 149, 161, 172, 177, 180, 182, and 183 to the above-entitled bill.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 115 and 150 to the above-entitled bill.

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out item "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out item "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

PAGE 1

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the first calendar quarter of 1982 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective letter and number.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out item "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRIBUTE TO MISS KATHY MITCHELL

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of this body the achievements of a young lady from Lexington Mo., Miss Kathy Mitchell.

Kathy Mitchell was crowned the new Miss Lafayette County for 1983, enabling her to represent Lafayette County next year in the Miss Missouri Pageant. Miss Mitchell, an accounting major at the University of Missouri, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William D. Buchanan, also of Lexington, Mo.

Beauty pageants are nothing new to Miss Mitchell. In 1980, she was the second runner-up in the Miss Lafayette County contest, first runner-up in the Missouri Show-Me Pageant and, in 1982, she was the first runner-up in the Miss Trenton Pageant.

I take this opportunity to congratulate Kathy Mitchell for her outstanding achievements and to wish her every success in her future endeavors.●

THE PLIGHT OF SOVIET JEWRY

HON. HANK BROWN

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to tell my colleagues about the plight of two courageous people, Vladimir and Efim Feldman. These two brothers first applied to leave the Soviet Union 10 years ago. Today, they still remain there, yearning for the chance to live in freedom.

The situation for those of the Jewish faith in the Soviet Union has deteriorated in the last few years. Vladimir and Efim Feldman are only two of the many who are being subjected to a virulent, government-sponsored, anti-Semetic campaign. Jews are being denied the opportunity to study at Soviet universities or secure decent employment. Those bold enough to ask to leave the Soviet Union often are ostracized, losing jobs and friends.

The case of Vladimir and Efim Feldman, unfortunately, is characteristic of this treatment. Along with their mother, Riva Feldman, the two brothers made their first emigration application in October 1972. They were refused, and Efim was drafted into the army. He completed his duty in 1975. That same year, Vladimir was drafted, but was demobilized in 1976.

Riva Feldman, an active member of the Moscow Women's Refusenik Group, finally was permitted to emigrate in April 1980. Her sons, however, have repeatedly been denied permission to emigrate on the grounds that their military service made them privy to "state secrets," even though Efim had been out of the military for 7 years and Vladimir only served 1 year as a guard for a construction unit.

The world must not remain silent while these people and others are denied the opportunity to live in freedom. The National Conference on Soviet Jewry estimates that only 182 Soviet Jews were allowed to emigrate in June of this year—the lowest monthly figure in over 10 years and a 96-percent decrease from comparable figures in June 1979.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will continue to speak out for the Feldmans and others seeking to emigrate from the Soviet Union.●

OPPOSITION TO HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES PROPOSAL

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution, cosponsored by 53 of my colleagues, which expresses congressional, opposition to Health and Human Services Secretary Schweiker's recent attempt to silence public opinion through radical changes in the Department's policy of giving notice and soliciting comments on proposed regulations. This constitutes one more example in a long list of this administration's efforts to reverse decades of progress in expanding citizen participation in Government decisionmaking. It is an affront to the American people and should be promptly withdrawn.

My opposition to the Department's ill-advised proposal to exempt itself from any legal obligation to follow notice and comment procedures stems from a strong conviction that public input is essential to the development of just and sound policy. Experience has taught us that open rulemaking strengthens participatory democracy and thereby mitigates the possibility of arbitrary, harmful, and irresponsible regulations.

Notice and comment procedures are essential because they afford Government agencies the opportunity to receive important data, diverse perspectives, and suggestions for alternative approaches before promulgating regulations. Such an exchange of information between the public and decisionmakers has led to improved regulations and increased Government responsiveness and accountability to those affected by its actions. It is quite clear that the public benefit from citizen involvement far outweighs any administrative delay or burden that may result from open rulemaking procedures.

The Administrative Procedure Act requires that Government agencies publish notice of proposed rulemaking, provide the public with an opportunity to comment on such proposals, and consider the comments before promulgating final rules. These procedures were carefully constructed to provide flexibility for Government agencies and guarantee protection for the public. The act permits Government agencies to waive notice and comment procedures for "good cause," but this discretion is subject to public and judicial review. If the Secretary's proposal were to be implemented, the courts would be stripped of their right to review the validity of the Department's decision to forego these procedures.

Unfortunately, there is an exemption in the Administrative Procedure Act for rules relating to loans, grants, benefits, or contracts. Most of the Department's major programs, including social security, medicare, medicaid, AFDC, and SSI fall within this loophole. However, 12 years ago, former HEW Secretary Elliott Richardson waived this exemption because he recognized the importance of public access to information and participation in the Department's policy development.

Moreover, the Administrative Conference of the United States has recommended elimination of the so-called proprietary exemption in the APA because, and I quote, "the potential damage to sound policy formulation and private rights is great in any case where (public) participation is not assured." Both the full Senate and the House Judiciary Committee recently heeded this recommendation by adopting legislation to eliminate this technicality in the APA. In contrast to the Department of Health and Human Services, the Congress intends to increase public involvement in the regulatory process.

I am particularly disturbed by the Department's exclusionary stance because of the broad scope of grant and benefit programs that fall within its jurisdiction. Many of these programs affect the health and security of millions of Americans. The Schweiker proposal would not only negatively affect program beneficiaries, but it would also exclude hospitals, human service providers, doctors, unions, State and local governments, businesses, and nursing homes from the rulemaking process. Without their important contribution, program administration and service delivery would likely deteriorate, causing needless hardships among those dependent on these programs.

It is critical that the Department reconsider this move to close itself off from the public as quickly as possible. During the next few months, many important and far-reaching regulations will be issued as a result of the 1982 reconciliation bill and the administration's own agenda for reforming health and human services programs. The public must have the opportunity to comment on these upcoming changes.

Apparently many people serving in this administration prefer to ignore the fact that our Government belongs to the people. Despite its rhetoric, the administration continues to sabotage established practices of open government and to suppress public participation. In doing so, they have furthered the perception of the Federal bureaucracy as closed, exclusive and indifferent to the concerns of the people it is supposed to be serving.

I invite my colleagues to join with me in urging the withdrawal of this Health and Human Services proposal and affirming the American people's right to be involved in their Government's policy decisions.

The text of the resolution follows:

H. CON. RES. —

Whereas public participation in the regulatory process is essential to the formulation of fair and sound policy;

Whereas open rulemaking mitigates the possibility of arbitrary, harmful, and ill-advised rulemaking;

Whereas the Department of Health and Human Services has successfully adhered to Administrative Procedure Act notice and comment period procedures for twelve years;

Whereas the daily lives of millions of Americans are profoundly affected by the regulations that are issued by the Department of Health and Human Services; and

Whereas it is critical that program beneficiaries, State and local governments, human services providers, and organizations continue to be afforded the opportunity for input whenever Health and Human Services regulatory changes are proposed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of Health and Human Services should withdraw proposed rules published in the Federal Register on June 22, 1982 (pp. 26860-61) that would reduce public notice and comment opportunities, and affirm current practices which involve the public in rulemaking procedures.●

A TRIBUTE TO ANDREW GLICK

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

● Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the outstanding work done for all of us by a former page, Andrew Glick. After having spent the last 2 years as a page, Andy recently left his job in the Democratic cloakroom to begin college at Brandeis University. His knowledge of the House of Representatives and his willingness to be helpful made Andy invaluable to all the Members. No request was ever too great or too small for him. He accepted his responsibilities cheerfully and always did his best to make our lives easier.

Now that Andy has moved on to bigger things, I know my colleagues will join me in expressing our deep appreciation for all his help. I consider Andy Glick a close personal friend and shall miss seeing him on a daily basis. However, I know that, with his love of politics and of the House, Andy will be back—perhaps as a Member of Congress himself. Under any circumstances, I know Andy will go far in life. He will certainly be hard to replace.●

TARGETED DEVELOPMENT AID AMENDMENT

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I introduced the "targeted development aid amendment." In my statement, I inadvertently left out the name of one of my colleagues as a cosponsor of this legislation, a Member of this body who has provided solid and consistent leadership on world food and hunger problems. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add the name of my colleague TOM DASCHLE as a cosponsor of H.R. 7012.●

DIVERSION OF DRUGS FROM FLORIDA TO NEW YORK

HON. LEO C. ZEFERETTI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. ZEFERETTI. Mr. Speaker, yesterday there appeared in the New York Times a front page story entitled, "Drug Seizures Rising in New York as Navy Blocks Florida Route." I read this story with great concern but with little surprise. Since the creation of the Vice President's Task Force on Violent Crime in South Florida, I have consistently warned the administration that the massive concentration of Federal enforcement personnel and equipment in south Florida strips other narcotics entry ports, as New York, of needed defenses against drug traffickers. I cautioned then—as I do now—a concentrated drug interdiction effort in one area of the country will only force traffickers to channel their efforts elsewhere.

In what is turning out to be a prophetic event, the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control held a hearing on narcotics law enforcement in the New York area on April 30, 1982. A major issue was the impact of the transfer of Coast Guard, Customs, DEA, and other Federal manpower and equipment to south Florida. We were warned then as to what would happen—any lessening of our narcotics enforcement efforts in the Northeast would leave the Long Island, New Jersey, and New England coasts and area airports severely vulnerable to narcotics trafficking. This sadly has come true. The Times reported record seizures of cocaine and marihuana in the Northeast in recent months.

The administration has failed to give the problem of drug trafficking the budgetary priority and resources it deserves. Instead of insuring that all areas of major narcotics importation are able to sustain successful interdiction efforts, the administration has acted with a crisis management approach, shifting rather than increasing resources. In a recent meeting with Vice President BUSH, I vigorously pointed out the need for a balanced enforcement policy.

Let no one be mistaken, I fully support the activities of the south Florida task force. These resources cannot be withdrawn. It was my action in the Rules Committee that placed in the urgent supplemental the operational funds needed by the Coast Guard and Customs to participate in the south Florida effort. I applaud the successes of the task force. However, its achievements highlight the failure of the administration to develop a national comprehensive narcotics control program. If we are to have any hope of significantly reducing the drug trade, our drug law enforcement agencies must be provided with the resources needed to maintain a balanced enforcement posture in all threatened areas.●

THE COOPERATIVE STATE FORESTRY RESEARCH AND EXTENSION AMENDMENTS OF 1982

HON. WILLIAM C. WAMPLER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to require a substantial policy shift in funding agricultural forestry research and extension.

From every quarter of our society and abroad conditions are occurring which place increasing demands on American agriculture to produce more and better wood products at cheaper prices. The General Accounting Office in a report to Congress in January 1981, "New Means of Analysis Required for Policy Decisions Affecting Private Forestry Sector," stated "that consumption of timber product in terms of roundwood volume could double by the year 2030." The U.S. Forest Service in the same report projects a timber shortage of 15.8 billion cubic feet of timber by 1990. And the GAO further stated in its report that the wholesale price index for timber escalated from 6.4 in 1900 to 127.4 in 1976. GAO further indicated that prices for timber have climbed at a much faster rate since 1900, especially since 1946 when the price index rose from about 71 to 127.4 in 1976.

Obviously, if this Nation is to build or improve homes for its citizens, supply a growing body of Americans with furniture and other products for homes and businesses, provide pulp for paper products, meet the demands for boxes, cartons, and bags to protect other products from damage in transportation or to increase shelf life, and supply wood and wood residues to supplement or replace our dwindling supplies of primary fossil fuels, we must take action to improve wood supplies and cut costs of production. Since trees in a forest take years to reach a size when they can be harvested for the use of mankind, the sooner we take action to correct this pressing problem, the sooner we will have a chance to prevent serious wood shortages and halt price escalations of wood products.

Today the U.S. timber supply comes from three sources, that owned by the public in our national and State forests, that held by the forest industry, and that owned by nonindustrial owners in relatively small private holdings. Of the total 737 million acres of forests in the Nation, about 428 million acres, or about 66 percent of our total forested areas, are classified as "commercial land," that is, each acre is capable of producing at least 20 cubic feet of wood each year and the acreage is not reserved for other uses such as parks and wilderness areas. Ownership of commercial timberland is as follows:

OWNERSHIP OF COMMERCIAL TIMBERLAND, JANUARY 1977

Owner	Million acres	Percentage
Public	135.7	28
Industrial	68.7	14
Nonindustrial	277.9	58
Total	482.3	100

Source: U.S. Forest Service.

Timber is a renewable resource but one which requires a long wait between investment and maturity. Thus, while it is profitable to harvest current forests, there may be reluctance to invest in the production of future supplies. To deal with this problem, the Congress has established long-term objectives for the national forests, stipulated in the National Forest Management Act of 1976. It also has provided tax incentives and other forms of assistance to encourage private timber production.

But, the actions Congress has taken and the research efforts we have taken have not sufficiently answered the problem of meeting expected wood products shortfalls of the all too near future.

There are three pressing reasons that exists for my bill. They are:

First, timber replacement and improved utilization technology must be developed if we are to meet these known expanding demands for the future.

Second, if we are to have the necessary quality and quantity of wood to meet future demands and to protect the environment we must begin today to plant the types of trees we will need to replace what we are cutting today and tomorrow, this means better management of our existing forests.

Third, current forestry research and education policy favors the public and industrial forces resources over our nonindustrial resources by a ratio of about 10 to 1. Yet over 58 percent of our total forest potential lies in nonindustrial forest area largely owned by millions of small landholders. Moreover, the greatest return toward meeting the demands for the future and reducing the cost of wood products lies in improving and better utilizing these nonindustrial forest lands. I might add Mr. Speaker, that these privately held nonindustrial lands are not held by the Weyerhausers or the Georgia-Pacifics of this land as we are often led to believe, to the contrary, nonindustrial private lands are held by millions of small landholders, averaging about 25 to 50 acres in size.

My State of Virginia is a prime example of conditions in a majority of the wood producing States of this Nation.

First, nonindustrial private forest landowners own 77 percent of the commercial forest land of the State. Second, there are some alarming trends for Virginia's forest lands: One, the acreage of pine timberland is decreasing due to increasing urbanization and conversion of timber to other uses, and two, the composition of Virginia's forest are shifting from commercially valuable pine to low-valued hardwoods. Third, it is estimated that investments in better forest management activities capable of earning a 10-percent return would yield approximately 341 million additional cubic feet per year, a 41-percent increase over the current net annual growth of 823 million cubic feet. At current average stumpage prices, the value of the increased annual yield would be approximately $150–170 million.

I have become increasingly concerned that we have not engaged in sufficient study of forestry conditions nor have we developed the best ways to help the several million forest landowners apply knowledge gained from research so that they can secure the best set of benefits from their forest that they would desire to have.

We are a nation that has been strong on efficiency and progress in manufacturing techniques, but we have been far less progressive in devising ways to assure a constant and effective flow of raw materials, especially renewable resources such as our trees.

To have forests for tomorrow of the kind we will need and use, we have to act today. Ideally forest research should be a private endeavor funded with private money. However, there are several practical reasons why this has not been the situation and is not likely to be the situation in the future. Private firms are of necessity profit-oriented.

We would have to, in effect, grant a 100-percent tax credit for much of the forest land research that needs to be done for a private corporation to expend money that would not benefit it and its shareholders directly and almost solely. Such grants would then have to be supervised by the State or Federal Government granting this preferential tax treatment, and the likely cost and redtape that would result from this supervision would be greater than if the States and Federal Government performed the research directly with appropriated State or Federal funds.

Research of the type needed, then, is a public service with a public benefit and thus it ought to be directly publicly funded. And this is especially true of forest research, where long-term commitments are needed and research and development takes time to complete and distribute.

The forest industry, for many reasons which make sense to it, does not engage in extensive research that will benefit all private landowners. Most of its efforts are product and internally oriented rather than land and resource and publicly oriented.

We have in place a modest and useful system capable of the type of research that is needed in our forestry schools at our land grant colleges and universities and the Forest Service.

We have also developed a system of research grants under the McIntire-Stennis Act, which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to award formula-based research grants to qualified State forestry schools, such as the Forestry School at Virginia Tech. But, despite the enactment of a law sponsored by an eminent Senator from Mississippi and an illustrious former Member of the House from Maine, these institutions are only receiving in total about $12 million annually under this program.

This amount does not come close to meeting the public benefits that would be secured from adequate funding. We find this especially true when we consider that the total amount of funds expended by the U.S. Forest Service for the Federal Government-owned forests consisted of the bulk of $130 million in the current fiscal year. To me the disparity between funding for Federal-owned forests and privately owned forests is completely out of balance.

I have discussed this with a number of people, not only in Virginia, but also throughout the South, and the inescapable conclusion is that measured against what ought to be done to upgrade our private forest, which I believe is in the national interest, we as a Nation find ourselves woefully deficient. This is a situation that deserves to be changed and one that I am, as the ranking minority member of the committee on Agriculture, endeavoring to change.

The reductions planned in the fiscal year 1983 budget for all forms of forest research are in my view not going to produce public benefits, but rather will work against building a long-term stronger economy that will yield better forests, better income for the millions of small landowners, more reasonably priced products for consumers, and a balanced budget for the States and Federal Government.

It is not my purpose to write that program. This is the task that ought to be carried forward by those with good technical knowledge of the sorts of forest research that will meet the most critical needs. However, I shall identify, as examples, some of the types of things that I am persuaded, after considerable discussion with the people of Virginia, deserve far greater attention and funding.

The Federal Government, in my opinion, should have the same cooperative partnership with the States to improve our private forests that it has long had and developed over the years with respect to our farmers and ranchers in the production of food and fiber. This cooperative partnership has made our country first in the world in producing, processing, and marketing the most abundant, safest, and most reasonably priced food and fiber products the world has ever seen. Our people deserve no less when it comes to helping landowners grow forest products.

The forests of this Nation are not a single environmental or economic unit. While we share much in common, even in Virginia the situation and the needs are different in our tidal counties, where softwood lands are more dominant, and in our uplands and mountains, where the hardwood forests have become the major force.

I would cite two principal areas for immediate attention from the standpoint of Virginia: First, pine forest regeneration, and second, utilization of existing hardwood forests.

I have selected for citation just two of the numerous areas where we need to accelerate research and to improve our forest extension service. In my view there are a number of areas where we need to make useful examinations and devise ways to get the results to landowners. Forests are influenced by the effects of weather and natural events. Trees are afflicted by attacks from insects and diseases.

The way the land is managed and the timber harvested has impacts. The soil, the water, the wildlife and the uses man makes of the land affect and interact with each other. The techniques used to harvest trees and convert them to products affect the utility of the forest. The economics of all of these elements, along with the economics of the forest resource infrastructure, are of vital interest.

What is needed then is legislation which accomplishes the following: An increase in funding of State forestry research and renewable resources extension to insure that we increase the productive capability and usability of our millions of acres of private forests held by millions of small landholders; a formula for these funding increases that places the bulk of these funds in the States which grow, harvest and add value to timber in the form of needed and improved wood products; a formula that also provides for improving the best conservation aspects of all our forests, improves the recreational capability of our forests, and the environment of our whole Nation; and finally a provision that enables the Nation to conduct high priority forestry research on a competitive basis by our best forestry researchers.

The bill I am introducing today is conceptual in nature. In my judgment and the judgment of others these concepts are valid. However, mine is not an inflexible position. It is my intention to develop a dialog on this legislation by submitting my bill to the deans of forestry and the directors of extension in every State. I also need the views of the wood products industry, the forestry associations, State foresters, public interest groups and the executive branch. It is my hope after reviewing their comments to incorporate them into an improved bill.

A brief explanation of the bill follows:

EXPLANATION OF LEGISLATION

Short Title: "The Cooperative State Forestry Research and Extension Amendments of 1982."

1. The bill amends the McIntire-Stennis act, the principle Act that authorizes fund for cooperative State Forestry research at State designated forestry schools, by:

a. Increasing the eligibility requirements for receipt of Federal funds by requiring higher graduate level training in forestry for institutional recipients.

b. Increasing the level of funding for the McIntire-Stennis Act from $12,500,000 annually to approximately $30,000,000, by requiring McIntire-Stennis appropriations to be made at an amount equal to 25 per centum of the aggregate amount of all research appropriated for the conduct of research by the U.S. Forest Service and Cooperative State Forestry Research in each fiscal year beginning October 1, 1982. Such appropriations are to be apportioned by a formula that gives the first 4 per centum to the Federal government for administration of the program; apportions 10 per centum of the remainder equally among eligible institutions; and the remaining 86 per centum is apportioned among eligible state forestry institutions based upon a formula which weighs the ratio each state bears to all states in each of the following categories: as to the volume of growing timber on private and Federal forest lands; the volume of growing timber on private forest lands; the volume of timber cut on private and Federal forest lands; the volume of timber cut on private forest lands; and the value added to timber manufactured from timber grown or imported into a State.

c. The apportionment duties of the council appointed under the McIntire-Stennis Act are eliminated and in its stead the Council is required to recommend high priority research areas to improve forestry resources in the United States to the Secretary of Agriculture.

2. The McIntire-Stennis Act is further amended to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a new competitive grants program for high-priority forestry research for all colleges, meeting the requirements of the McIntire-Stennis Act and for other institutions, organizations and persons having a capacity to carry out high priority forestry research. The Secretary is required to establish a peer review system for evaluating competing proposals, and $10 million is authorized annually to support this new program.

3. The bill also amends the Smith-Lever Act, which authorizes the Extension Service and the Renewable Resources Extension Act, so as to permit an expansion of forestry extension under the Renewable Resources Extension Act. This program is expanded from approximately $2,000,000 annually to $15,000,000. This is accomplished in the same manner as the previous action described above to upgrade the McIntire-Stennis program, except that the percentage of appropriations of the aggregate of all extension under the Smith-Lever Act and the Renewable Resources Extension Act made under this provision are only 5 per centum instead of the 25 per centum cited in the previous McIntire-Stennis amendment. Additionally, the apportionment of funds equally among states is at 20 per centum of the funds. The remaining 76 per centum of the funds to be apportioned follow the same formula between states as in the early cited McIntire-Stennis Act amendments.

4. This bill is effective October 1, 1984.●

JONATHAN BINGHAM

HON. PETER A. PEYSER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Jonathan Bingham, an outstanding Member of Congress who is retiring at the end of this session.

JACK is leaving the Congress after 18 years of exemplary service to his constituents and to his country. His unyielding devotion to those principles in which he believed made him one of the most respected Members of Congress that this body has seen.

JACK'S service on the House Foreign Affairs Committee and his depth of knowledge on foreign affairs has been a constant source of strength to this country. As one of the leading supporters for the State of Israel he was chiefly responsible for antiboycott legislation that prohibited U.S. complicity in the Arab boycott of Israel. His commitment to that Nation served as an inspiration to all of us and to democratic nations around the world.

JACK was also one of the main authors of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act, one of the most important pieces of legislation produced by the House Foreign Affairs Committee. He became the pioneer of the nuclear freeze movement in this country and it was my pleasure to join with him in cosponsoring this resolution.

Since our congressional districts in the Bronx shared the same boundaries, I had the pleasure of working on many projects with him. His dedicated commitment and service that brought better housing, health care and services to the residents of the Bronx will always be remembered by the people whose lives were touched by knowing him.

Since I first came to this Congress, in 1971 JACK BINGHAM has been one of the most forthright, honest, and intelligent Members of Congress that I have met. He has represented the people of his district and this country with great skill and devotion. He will be truly missed by all of us.●

IMPLICATIONS OF THE LAW OF THE SEA TREATY FOR OCEAN MINING

HON. JIM LEACH

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, an emerging focal point of the political controversy surrounding the Law of the Sea Convention centers on the implications of that treaty for future U.S. ocean mining and other commercial interests. The President took one point of view when he announced July 9 that the United States would refuse to sign the treaty because of remaining imperfections in the deep seabed mining provisions of the text. An article in the August 23, 1982, issue of Fortune magazine provides a different perspective on the future prospects for U.S. business outside the international Law of the Sea Treaty. I commend it to the attention of my colleagues:

THE REAGANITES' MISADVENTURE AT SEA

(By Tom Alexander)

Several American companies have been captivated for years now by the lure of manganese nodules—those black, potato-shaped, metal-rich objects that litter some mid-ocean floors. These companies have spent around $350 million prospecting the seas and developing the impressive equipment required to raise the nodules and process them into refined metals. But as a result of recent decisions by the U.S. government, it is likely that when nodule harvesting eventually starts, the companies doing it won't be American. The U.S. outfits will probably have either fled to foreign shores or sold off their technology and dropped the mining idea entirely.

What's oddest about this imminent demise of American-flag ocean mining is that it amounts to a complex form of corporate suicide. Climaxing a long and successful lobbying campaign by the industry and its supporters in government, the Reagan Administration recently announced that it won't sign the international Law of the Sea Treaty, which has been under negotiation for 14 years. That pretty much sank any prospects that U.S. companies will be able to mine nodules in international waters.

In the short run, it's true, the dissolution of U.S. ocean mining is no big deal. Given the high cost of operations and the current dismal market for metals, nodule gathering may not prove profitable for decades. But the Administration's decision threatens more immediate national interests, notably freedom of navigation for ships and aircraft and political and commercial relations with the world at large. In the longer run it may impede U.S. access to strategic metals.

Were the implications less disquieting, the affair would be notable mainly for its quality of farce. For the U.S. was a prime instigator of the Law of the Sea Treaty—now widely referred to as LOST. What's more, the treaty accomplished practically everything the U.S. had hoped it would. But by withdrawing, the U.S. may deny itself the benefits. The turnabout on the treaty also reinforces the country's international reputation for inconstancy and unreliability.

WALLS IN THE OCEAN

The ' nerican interest in securing a treaty on maritime law dates back to the 1950s and the emerging problem of "creeping jurisdiction"—coastal nations extending their seaward boundaries beyond the traditional three-mile limit. Many countries began adopting 12-mile limits; several Latin American countries claimed 200 miles. In the face of these claims, U.S. defense planners—and their counterparts in the Soviet Union—wanted to pin down their rights to navigate freely. Widely adopted and strictly exercised, the extended jurisdiction could close some 116 international straits to shipping and large expanses of ocean to aircraft. As it was, some countries were demanding that foreign warships provide 24-hour notice before entering their new territorial waters and that nuclear submarines passing through straits—perhaps on their way to secret stations—travel on the surface.

Looking for ways to induce other countries to guarantee unimpeded navigation, the U.S. hit on the idea of bringing in marine natural resources-notably manganese nodules. Oceanographic research had revealed the abundance of the nodules, particularly the rich deposits in the international waters of the eastern Pacific. In the Sixties, enthusiastic scientists and would-be mining entrepreneurs portrayed those seafloors as being paved with trillions of dollars' worth of fairly high-grade sources of manganese, copper, nickel, and cobalt. Metal prices were high and climbing; grades of ores from onshore mines were declining. U.S. companies—familiar corporate names such as Kennecott and Lockheed and less familiar ones such as Sedco and Deepsea Ventures—surveyed prospective seabed claims and developed techniques for lifting nodules from their three-mile-deep resting places and refining them. To help raise capital and spread financial and political risk, the companies acquired partners abroad.

THE 77 SAW AN OPPORTUNITY

At first everyone presumed that the nodules fell under the centuries-old doctrine of freedom of the seas—that, like fish, they were free for the taking. But in 1966, President Johnson, in a burst of 1960s-style openhandedness and sentimentality, characterized the nodules as belonging to all nations. In 1970 the U.N. declared them to be the "common heritage of mankind"—L.B.J.'s very words. The U.S. voted in favor of the declaration. A clause in it said that no country could exercise rights over the international seabed except in accordance with a new treaty.

In authorizing the U.S. vote, President Nixon saw the proposed treaty as an opportunity to obtain worldwide agreements to keep straits open, assure U.S. rights of navigation and marine research within 200-mile waters, provide mechanisms for settling disputes, and resolve other troublesome issues associated with the oceans.

These expectations failed to anticipate torpedoes from two directions. At the U.N., the newly militant Third World voting bloc known as the Group of 77 saw law-of-the-sea negotiations as an opportunity to advance its New International Economic Order, aimed at obtaining a more equal distribution of the world's wealth. The Group of 77 drove a hard bargain on seabed mining. Among other things, it insisted that all mining be carried out under contract to an International Seabed Authority, which would divert part of the profits to the Third World. Some members of the Group of 77, joined by some developed mining countries like Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, also demanded limits on seabed production to protect their metal prices.

The other main source of trouble was the embryonic U.S. ocean-mining industry itself. It did not care for Nixon's scheme, and its friends in Congress strongly opposed the Group of 77's demands.

VERGING ON THE BIZARRE

Deadlocked over seabed mining, the treaty negotiations dragged out until 1976, when Secretary of State Henry Kissinger put forward a package of compromises, which were adopted. He proposed a dual system that would allow mining both by private operators and by an internationally owned entity, which came to be referred to as the Enterprise. Kissinger suggested that the Enterprise might get help from its private competitors—not only capital but also access to proprietary mining and processing technology. One provision carried international generosity to an almost bizarre extreme: before a private company could obtain a permit to mine a new seabed site, it would first have to prospect two sites, and then the Enterprise would be allowed to pick the one it wanted.

By 1980 it finally looked as though a treaty was within reach, a treaty that would effect many changes in international law. It would grant coastal nations 12-mile territorial seas plus the rights to natural resources in a 200-mile "economic zone." But it would also guarantee freedom of passage for ships and aircraft of signatory nations. It would establish standards covering marine pollution and set up an international tribunal to resolve disputes. A final conference to iron out a few remaining differences was scheduled for the spring of 1981.

WASHED-AWAY MEMORY

Then Reagan was elected. The new Administration paid little attention to the formidably complex sea-law issues until shortly before the final session was to begin, two months after Reagan took office. By that time, government had little institutional memory about such issues as navigation, which had prompted the U.S. to initiate the LOST process to begin with. Instead the Defense Department suddenly became preoccupied with strategic metals, notably manganese and cobalt, which the U.S. imports largely from Communist or unstable Third World countries. And the Administration became preoccupied with questions of precedent and free-enterprise ideology.

A few days before the conference the Administration abruptly fired the old Carter delegation's leaders and demanded a year's delay in the negotiations while it studied the whole treaty with a fresh team. The year-long study turned into a bitter and confused affair. Badly divided, the various government agencies argued their narrow concerns with little regard for the overall package of U.S. maritime interests. Many of the bureaucrats most knowledgeable about the history of LOST were either transferred or intimidated into silence. Some of them contend that middle-level political appointees deliberately kept their Cabinet and White House superiors in the dark about the complex web of U.S. interests and options.

The intellectual vacuum was filled by lobbyists from the mining companies and by people like Secretary of the Interior James Watt and Theodore Kronmiller, a deputy assistant secretary at State, who were outraged by the thought that private U.S. enterprises would put up the capital and take the risks for the benefit of a centrally planned international regime. Some of the Third World's other demands seemed designed to inflame this reaction—the insistence, for example, that part of the seabed-mining proceeds should go to movements like the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Some of those involved in the U.S. deliberations say that Kronmiller and others really sought to sabotage the LOST negotiations by imposing demands they were fairly sure the other side would never accept. For instance, they demanded that all ceilings on seabed production be eliminated, even though the ceilings actually negotiated appear to be so liberal as to have no practical effect.

More moderate members of the U.S. delegation, including the chief negotiator, Washington lawyer Leigh Ratiner, agreed that some of the treaty's features were unacceptable. These included the absence of guarantees that the international seabed authority would actually authorize a private company to mine once it had spent, say, $200 million on exploration and equipment. The moderates also objected to a provision for a future review conference, in which arduously negotiated compromises might be changed by a vote of the member nations. And they didn't like the requirement that mining companies sell their technology to the Enterprise.

Ratiner probably knows more about the law of the sea and Third World attitudes toward it than anybody else in the U.S., having spent some 16 years as a government sea-law functionary, chief negotiator in several sessions, and lobbyist for Kennecott and various other outfits interested in ocean industries. From that seasoned perspective, he believes that all the substantive objections could have been removed in the recent negotiations. Agreeing with that estimate is Elliot Richardson, who headed the U.S. law-of-the-sea delegation in the Carter Administration. Ratiner contends that the U.S. negotiating position was undermined by the hardliners' rigid and unrealistic demands, which convinced the Group of 77 that the U.S. wasn't negotiating in good faith.

This conviction was bolstered by a strategy the U.S. delegation has been energetically pursuing: an attempt to persuade other Western countries and Japan to join the U.S. in a "reciprocating states agreement" or "mini-treaty" independent of LOST. Each country would pledge to recognize the mining rights and claims of all the others. The U.S. hoped that by the sheer weight of economic power represented in the mini-treaty it could prevent the maxi-treaty from supplanting the freedom-of-the-seas principle in international law.

Unfortunately the scheme probably won't succeed. Given the choice between joining a legally dubious mini-treaty to mine an economically marginal resource and joining a maxi-treaty with multiple benefits, the other industrial countries seem to prefer the later. For one thing, most to them are more sensitive than the U.S. to trade relations and goodwill in the Third World. In April, to be sure, several of these countries abstained on a vote to adopt a treaty draft, but odds are that most will eventually ratify the treaty.

The Group of 77 cleverly helped spike the mini-treaty scheme this spring by sweetening the mining provisions. In effect, they agreed to create for the first generation of mining consortia a worldwide cartel guaranteeing them exclusive access to the seabed for 30 to 50 years, while protecting prices by controlling production. This "prior investment protection" clause for miners has driven a wedge between the U.S. and its allies. Moreover, it will probably either break up the mining consortia or cause their American participants to move abroad. The American companies have acquired connections with sophisticated foreign outfits, including oil companies, which not only tend to be tolerant of such arrangements but also have larger interests to protect. (See table.)

A SORT OF SMORGASBORD

Despite the Administration's recent denouncement of LOST, based on its mining provisions, the U.S. is still trying to keep a hand in the proceedings that deal with navigation and the scores of other provisions that it would like to see become international law. The delegates are scheduled to meet in Caracas in December to sign the "final act," one step short of the actual treaty. Some officials say the U.S. plans to sign this non-binding document, which will permit it to participate as an observer in some of the technical sessions dealing with various issues. But the U.S. says it will not participate in the seabed-mining sessions, nor sign the treaty when it is ready in January. In effect, the Administration seems to regard the treaty not as a give-and-take bargain but as a smorgasbord from which it can pick items it likes.

Some American mining companies and their supporters in government claim, for example, that seabed mining is still covered by the doctrine of freedom of the seas. But the U.S. itself acknowledged doubts about that doctrine years ago when it invited the rest of the world to sit down and clarify the matter. LOST is the outcome of that process, and it will soon become part of international law. It will, among other things, deny a go-it-alone miner's right to stake out a seabed-mining claim. And without a widely recognized claim, no company can prudently invest the kind of money it will take to harvest manganese modules. Surveys by the General Accounting Office and the Department of Commerce support the unsurprising conclusion that banks will not lend the $1.2 billion or more required to equip a mining venture when the claim is disputed. So for all their free-enterprise rhetoric, some of the companies have been counting on the U.S. government to subsidize them or insure them against the risk of mining outside the treaty. Few Washington observers give those hopes much chance.

At any rate, government's preoccupation with the mining issues in LOST seems misplaced. Based on current metal prices and anticipated mining costs, an MIT model projects a rate of return to mining companies of only 9.5%—too low to trigger investment. Someday, no doubt, as onshore mines are depleted, seabed mining will make economic sense. Depending on whose projections you believe, that could be anywhere from ten to about 25 years from now. Whenever the time comes, mining outside the treaty will be riskier than mining within it.

WHALES, FOR EXAMPLE

Right now, nobody in authority in Washington seems to have any clear ideas about what the U.S. should do that doesn't sacrifice the very benefits the U.S. originally sought to preserve. The Administration has been preoccupied with the precedents the treaty would establish, such as the "common heritage" and seabed-authority concepts, which they hold to be antithetical to American concepts of private property and of rewarding those who make efforts and take risks. But it's hard to find much practical substance in these concerns. As for precedents, U.S. governments and corporations have long dealt with all kinds of alien, sometimes absurd, regimes and institutions. And there's nothing novel about international regulation of common resources. Radio frequencies are one example. Whales are another.

Something else that bothered the Administration about the treaty was the application of the one-nation, one-vote principle to control of seabed resources. Opponents of the treaty feared that the huge voting majorities of the Communist and Third World countries might swamp Western interests. Initially, changes could be made only by unanimous consent. But 20 years after mining starts, changes could be imposed by three-quarters of the countries voting. Like the other Administration fears, this one appears to be exaggerated. At the very worst, the U.S. could always withdraw from the treaty.

Some oil company representatives and others in the mining consortia privately acknowledge that the treaty really isn't all that bad compared with many business deals in the Third World. "A good thing about the treaty," one man observes, "is that if the seabed authority tries to screw you, it's not just an expropriation, it's a treaty violation."

The fees and taxes to be paid to the authority are comparable to those some countries impose on mining enterprises ashore. And given the nation's interest in access to strategic materials, there is a fair likelihood that the federal government would credit the imposts against U.S. taxes, as is usually the case with foreign taxes now. Moreover, an analysis by the Bureau of Mines discounts the seriousness of the technology-transfer provisions. A company has to transfer only technology that the Enterprise can't find anywhere else, and the bureau says there are at least four manufacturers for every component of seabed-mining hardware. In any case, the Enterprise would have to pay a fair price, arrived at by commercial arbitration. Finally the treaty's prior-investment-protection clause, with its cartel-like protections against new entrants and overproduction, would make life more relaxed for the companies that qualify—though that, to be sure, would not necessarily serve the public interest.

As matters are shaping up, the question of whether seabed mining—when it eventually comes about—will be a good deal under LOST scarcely matters since no American company is likely to mine outside the treaty anyway. What matters more is the cost to the U.S. of going its own way. It could be argued that the U.S. would be better off if there were no LOST at all. But that option doesn't exist. Whether the U.S. ratifies or not, the treaty will come into force one year after at least 60 countries ratify, possibly as soon as 1984.

HERE COME THE GUNBOATS

The LOST process has already begun to affect the behavior of coastal nations. Unlike national law, international law has traditionally been determined primarily by custom. LOST amounts to an explicit program to fix law by international agreement instead, but custom—that is, what countries are allowed to get away with—will continue to exert a shaping force on the treaty's actual effects. Since the treaty amounts to a delicate bargain between countries with widely diverse interests, adherents will have an incentive to prevent other countries from getting away with much.

An analogous instance was the U.S. challenge last year to Libya's unilateral claims in the Gulf of Sidra, a challenge that took the form of downing two Libyan fighter planes. It's conceivable that some countries will be prepared to challenge any unilateral moves by non-signatories to mine oceans or even to traverse straits. Some states, Indonesia, Malaysia, Algeria, and Morocco among them, are already arming themselves with Exocet missiles, torpedoes, and gunboats to enforce the sovereignty authorized by LOST. Retaliatory expropriation or sabotage of American commerical interests abroad cannot be ruled out.

But even these consequences of the Reagan policy are less disquieting than the habits of mind it represents. It's the kind of policy that incurs considerable costs but no commensurate gains, that is better suited to raising ideological fervor in think tanks than to furthering national interests—the kind of policy that was a trademark of the Carter Administration in its worse days.

OCEAN MINERS IN STORMY WEATHER

So far, six consortia have been set up to mine seabed managanese nodules when politics and economics permit. But four of the six are already undergoing a lot of strain because of the Reagan Administration's rejection of the Law of the Sea Treaty. Under that treaty, companies from non-signatory countries won't be granted mining rights. U.S. companies will probaby either move abroad or give up on seabed mining.

Kennecott, a founding member of one consortium, has been absorbed by Sohio, which in turn is controlled by British Petroleum. So Kennecott's ocean-mining arm could probably find a haven in Britain—assuming that Britain ratifies the treaty. Some U.S. participants are trying to induce Latin American governments to provide a home, offering to locate nodule-refining plants in the domicile countries.

Conflicting attitudes toward the treaty have created tensions among consortium members. Lockheed, for example, has stirred up uneasiness in its Dutch partners with its tough anti-treaty stance. Like BP, Royal Dutch has oil-drilling, shipping, and marketing interests that might be endangered by ill will in the Third World.

Sedco, a specialist in offshore oil drilling, has developed mining technology for its consortium partners, but is now disenchanted with nodules, having ideological objections to the treaty and better things to do with its money. But Sedco's partner Inco, which produces 30% of the non-Communist world's nickel, is still interested in seabed mining even though some of its onshore mines are shut down. It has nightmarish visions of big oil companies cutting into its share of the nickel market.●

NIAGARA GAZETTE OPPOSES BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, the Niagara Gazette published a very thoughtful editorial last week that raised serious questions about including the proposed balanced budget amendment in the U.S. Constitution.

Let me quote from the editorial:

There is no question about the desirability of a balanced budget, but there are serious questions about making it a requirement in the Constitution. Why, for example, should economic theory be written into the Constitution. That document's amendments, save for the Prohibition amendment, have dealt with basic rights and responsibilities, not budgetary choices and certainly not legislative ones. And we know what happened to the Prohibition amendment. It was repealed.

Budget policy is part and parcel of a political philosophy and it should remain there where it is subject to recall by the people. The amendment, basically, is a way around responsibility for political leaders.

These are very important points that I feel Members of Congress must consider as we address this drastic proposal. As I have stated in the past, amending the Constitution is not something that is approached lightly. The Constitution is, as the editorial correctly points out, a document of basic rights and responsibilities. That is why it has served this Nation so well for almost 200 years. The full ramifications and implications of any proposed amendment to that document must be thoroughly understood and debated. The Niagara Gazette contributes to this debate and raises points that must be considered.

Following is the text of the editorial that appeared on August 12, 1982:

CONSTITUTION DOESN'T NEED BALANCED BUDGET PROVISO

One has to wonder about the merits of an amendment to the U.S. Constitution that contains within itself a way around it. But that is just one of the many questions raised by the proposal for a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced national budget.

A balanced budget certainly is something desirable, but it is by no means an absolute requirement. A balanced budget would indicate a government living within its means.

In the current state of economic affairs, it would lead to lower interest rates for everyone because it would curb the government's insatiable appetite for credit. The availability of an added $100 billion (the budget for the next fiscal year will be in excess of $100 billion) in credit certainly would help stimulate the economy by providing funds for industrial growth.

There is no question about the desirability of a balanced budget, but there are serious questions about making it a requirement in the constitution. Why, for example, should economic theory be written into the Constitution. That document's amendments, save for the Prohibition amendment, have dealt with basic rights and responsibilities, not budgetary choices and certainly not legislative ones. And we know what happended to the Prohibition amendment. It was repealed.

Budget policy is part and parcel of a political philosophy and it should remain there where it is subject to recall by the people. The amendment, basically, is a way around responsibility for political leaders.

David Broder best expressed that sentiment in a recent column:

"When we were a shaky seaboard society but recently liberated from colonial status, men of influence were prepared to risk 'their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor' to fight for the ratification of the charter of this nation's being.

"Today, this vast, rich and powerful nation is governed by people who, reducing their status to clerkships, are prepared—against their better judgment—to forward, for inclusion in that charter, any kind of simple-minded scheme they think commands a popular majority.

The amendment would allow for spending to exceed income if approved by a three-fifths vote of the House and Senate and in time of war. Which gets back to the original premise: What good is an amendment that recognizes the need to get around it?●

REIMBURSEMENT OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' RELOCATION EXPENSES

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation which would correct some of the inequities which currently exist when Federal employees are transferred from one geographic area to another to meet the needs of their Government agencies. I believe an unfair burden is placed on Federal employees who are relocated in their Government service jobs.

As a former Federal employee, I am sensitive to the special problems of our civil servants. But I also want to point out that that experience has given me a broader understanding of where productivity can take place. For example, I believe that the legislation I am introducing today, patterned after private sector moving practices, will force a reexamination of what moves are truly necessary expense. When the Government is required to meet its responsibility in this area, I predict the ultimate result will be a more accountable response to the American taxpayer who provides the funds for these decisions.

My interest in this legislation arises from a letter I recently received from a constituent faced with exorbitant moving expenses whose costs would go largely unreimbursed and yet whose option to move was mandated by the Government agency he served. This is not an uncommon occurrence. For example, the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration, Secret Service, IRS, Bureau of Customs, and many of the Department of Defense agencies must move their best middle and higher grade employees in order to staff their field offices with the best possible managers and executives. When reassignments are made to fill management needs, though, these agencies have found that many of these vital employees have chosen to leave Government service rather than accept moves they cannot afford. Government, these employees, and the American taxpayers are losers in this situation. We cannot afford to lose the best managers, executives, and employees in our law enforcement and DOD agencies at a time when it is crucial that we have continuity and stability in Government to improve productivity and efficiency.

To rectify this longstanding problem, I am introducing this bill which I believe will serve two purposes. First, it can help to alleviate the hardship faced by these employees and their families. Second, it should provide the necessary disincentive to agencies in transferring these personnel and thereby eliminate wasteful and unnecessary Government spending.

Specifically, this legislation would:

Place a flat rate limitation on the amount of expenses which could be reimbursed by the Government to 10 percent on the sale of a residence and 5 percent on the purchase of a residence.

Currently, these percentages are limited by a dollar figure, and thus because of the rising average cost of homes and of real estate fees, do not fully reimburse employees for their costs. My bill would retain the percentage limitations so that excess real estate fees and other fees would not become the norm.

Reimburse the transferred employees for the Federal, State, and city income taxes incurred as a result of reimbursements received.

Currently, when an employee does receive reimbursement, that amount is taxable income. The Internal Revenue Code currently limits the maximum amount of deductions that are available to employees to $3,000 for moving costs. Thus, when an employee who moves at the request of the Government, pays $16,000 in expenses, is reimbursed by the Government $8,000, and then can only deduct $3,000 of the $8,000 reimbursement, and then is required to pay tax on the $5,000. This results in the employee losing $8,000 initially on unreimbursed expenses, and then paying up to $2,500 taxes on the majority of the reimbursement received—$5,000. This $5,000 reimbursement often pushes the employee into a higher tax bracket and forces payment of a higher tax rate than on ordinary income from salary and wages. It is not unusual for an employee to end up paying $10,000 or more out of his or her own pocket for the move.

Allow the Government to reimburse the employee for the additional taxes incurred because of moving cost reimbursement. Studies available indicate that approximately 85 percent of private sector companies provide this assistance to employees—according to an August 1980 survey by the Employee Relocation Council. The Employee Relocation Council is a national association that reports on relocation trends and practices in private industry to other companies and to the press.

Reimburse transferred employees occupying temporary quarters at a new duty station for up to 60 days and at the discretion of the agency head for an additional 60 days.

Currently, the reimbursement limitation is for 30 days. This has proved inadequate in the current housing market because of the difficulty of finding a home in today's housing market and because of the difficulty in selling former residences. This has required employees to leave their families at their former duty station for an extended period of time until that residence is sold. The hardship of separation from the family is, in my opinion, too great a sacrifice to ask of these employees. The asking these employees to pay double expenses without reimbursement inflicts still greater unnecessary hardships.

Increase the weight of household goods which the Government would pay for moving from 11,000 to 18,000 pounds. The 11,000-pound limit was established in the 1960's and has not been changed since. It is grossly inadequate for the average family of today. This has caused Government employees to personally pay the substantial amount just to move their furniture.

I would point out that this legislation would carry no increased cost for the Government. A recent survey of agency heads conducted by the General Services Administration indicated that every Federal agency head except two would voluntarily absorb the increased cost resulting from employee transfer within their agency's total appropriations. Obviously the agency head recognized the absolute necessity to correct the inequities which result from present law and are willing to end the practice of forcing Government employees to subsidize their employer on geographic reassignments.

I am firmly committed to this concept and feel that for too long Government employees who have been transferred at the Government's request have been forced to subsidize the Government through paying much of the moving costs, and paying taxes on the minimal reimbursement which they do currently receive. Information provided to me indicates that in many instances these employees are forced to pay anywhere from $500 to $10,000 or more out of their own pockets to make these moves. In a letter dated December 22, 1981, to Mr. Gerald Carmen, Administrator of the General Services Administration, William H. Webster, the Director of the FBI, stated:

Results of studies have shown that an employee and family relocating from one geographical area to another under today's economic conditions will spend several thousand dollars of their personal funds in connection with the transfer . . . In discussions with my agents during the past year, the personal and financial problems facing them as a result of the government's inadequate employee relocation allowances has repeatedly been presented as one of the areas of most concern to them.

In a letter to David Stockman, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, on May 22, 1981, Attorney General William French Smith noted in discussing moving cost reimbursements:

It is not unusual for such transferred employees to incur in excess of $10,000 of reimbursed expenses. Although this is a government-wide problem, the hardships which result from these inadequate reimbursements have presented especially significant problems for the federal law enforcement agencies such as the FBI, the DEA and the U.S. Secret Service, inasmuch as these agencies must transfer their agents more often than most agencies in order to meet their investigative responsibilities.

In addition, I have been informed by the Internal Revenue Service that while on the average employees are reimbursed approximately $8,000 for moving cost expenses, an additional $8,000 is the average cost to an employee who is not reimbursed by the agency.

This bill would only apply to moves that were certified to be in the interest of the Government and would not apply to voluntary moves sought by the employee. It would also bring Government employees more in line with their private sector counterparts. Government employeees would still be receiving far short of what many private sector companies do for their employees, such as subsidizing interest rates in the purchase of new homes and purchasing old homes from the employees who are unable to sell their residences. While these are desirable benefits in these times of austerity, I do not believe it is appropriate to expend Government funds for those purposes. But I do believe this legislation could provide fair and equitable reimbursement.

By bringing Federal executives in line with private sector employees, and by forcing agencies to absorb the costs for transferring employees, I believe great cost savings can be achieved. This bill will benefit the affected Federal employees and the taxpayers and could successfully end the dilemma faced by many of our agencies as well. I urge support for this legislation.

SECTION ANALYSIS OF AMENDMENT

1. (a) Maintains the same percentage limitation for reimbursement of expenses in buying and selling a home, but abolishes the current $8,000 and $4,000 limitation.

(b) Reimburses employees for tax liabilities incurred because of moving cost reimbursements. This would bring Federal practice into line with the great majority of private sector companies.

(c) Increase from 30 to 60 days the period in which an agency can reimburse an employee and his family for temporary quarters. Would allow an agency head to extend for another 60 days in hardship cases.

(d) Increases the household goods weight limit from 11,000 lbs. to 18,000 lbs. maximum. The old limit is unrealistic and creates a hardship, requiring employees to sell their family furniture or pay excess charges for moving it. 2. Requires that any additional costs incurred by the agencies from this amendment must be borne by the agency out of their total appropriations. Every agency head but two volunteered to do this in a survey conducted by GSA, because the need was so great.

These increased allowances would only apply to moves certified by agencies to be in the interest of the government. Would not apply to moves voluntarily sought by an employee for his convenience.

H.R. 7054

A bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain moving expenses incurred by Federal civil service employees who are transferred in the interest of the Government from one official station or agency to another for permanent duty

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in the administration of any provisions of law generally applicable to Federal civil service employees an agency may make the expenditures described in section 2 in the case of any employee who is transferred in the interest of the Government from one official station or agency to another for permanent duty.

SEC. 2. (a) Under such regulations as the President may prescribe and to the extent considered necessary and appropriate, as provided therein, appropriations or other funds available to an agency for administrative expenses are available to provide, by reimbursement or otherwise, for all or part of the following expenses of an employee who is transferred as described in the first section of this Act:

(1)(A) Expenses incurred in connection with the sale of the residence of the employee at the old official station, not to exceed 10 percent of the sale price or $15,000, whichever is the lesser amount.

(B) Expenses incurred in connection with the purchase of a residence at the new official station, not to exceed 5 percent of the purchase price or $7,500, whichever is the lesser amount.

(C)(i) Effective October 1 of each year, the respective dollar amounts applicable under subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall be increased by the precent change, if any, in the Consumer Price Index published for December of the preceding year over that published for December of the second preceding year, adjusted to the nearest ⅒ of 1 percent.

(ii) For the purpose of clause (i), the term "Consumer Price Index" means the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers, U.S. City Average, Housing Component (1967=100), prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor.

(D) Reimbursement for brokerage fees on the sale of the residence and other expenses under this paragraph may not exceed those customarily charged in the locality where the residence is located, and reimbursement may not be made for losses on the sale of the residence. This paragraph applies regardless of whether title to the residence is in the name of the employee and a member of his immediate family, or in the name of a member of his immediate family alone. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prohibit reimbursements with respect to the settlement of an unexpired lease.

(2) Subsistence expenses of the employee and his immediate family for a period of 60 days while occupying temporary quarters when the new official station is located within the United States, its territories or possessions, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or the areas and installations in the Republic of Panama made available to the United States pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977 and related agreements (as described in section 3(a) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979). The period of residence in temporary quarters may be extended for an additional 60 days if the head of the agency concerned or his designee determines that there are compelling reasons for the continued occupany of termporary quarters. The regulations shall prescribe average daily rates for subsistence expenses per individual, not in excess of the maximum per diem rates prescribed by or under section 5702 of title 5, United States Code, for the location in which the temporary quarters are located.

(3)(A) Federal, State, or city income taxes incurred by the employee, or by the employee and such employee's spouse (if filing jointly), for any relocation expenses furnished in kind, or for which reimbursement or an allowance is provided by the Government (but only to the extent of the expenses paid or incurred), under paragraph (1), (2), or (4) of this subsection.

(B) Any reimbursement under subparagraph (A) shall be adjusted so as to compensate fully for any additional taxes for which the employee, or the employee and spouse, would be liable due to such reimbursement.

(4) Expenses of transporting, packing, crating, temporarily storing, draying, and unpacking the household goods and personal effects of the employee and his immediate family, not in excess of 18,000 pounds net weight.

(b) an agency may pay the expenses described in subsection (a) only after the employee agrees in writing to remain in the Government service for 12 months after his transfer, unless separated for reasons beyond his control that are acceptable to the agency concerned. If the employee violates the agreement, the money spent by the United States for such expenses is recoverable from the employee as a debt due the United States.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this Act shall be carried out by agencies by the use of funds appropriated or otherwise available for the administrative expenses of each of such respective agencies. No additional funds are authorized to be appropriated by this Act.

SEC. 4. (a) This Act shall take effect beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) The President shall, not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, prescribe the regulations required under this Act, and such regulations shall be made effective as of such date of enactment.●

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY AND THE TAX EXEMPT STATUS OF CHURCHES

HON. ALBERT LEE SMITH, JR.

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. SMITH of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I recently came across two excellent articles which appeared in the Chalcedon Report, Post Office Box 158, Vallecito, Calif. The articles are concerned with two very timely subjects, religious liberty and the tax-exempt status of churches. So often we address subjects here in Congress from a perspective of limited historical understanding. This shallow historical appreciation often leads to misinterpretation and misunderstanding of many of the principles upon which the Founding Fathers created our constitutional system. One must understand the social and political historical development of these principles to be able to correctly interpret the relationship of our law to them today.

At this time I insert in the RECORD, the following articles.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY VERSUS RELIGIOUS TOLERATION

One of the areas of profound ignorance today is religious liberty and the meaning thereof. The common pattern throughout history, including in the Roman Empire, has been religious toleration, a very different thing.

In religious toleration, the state is paramount, and, in every sphere, its powers are totalitarian. The state is the sovereign or lord, the supreme religious entity and power. The state decrees what and who can exist, and it establishes the terms of existence. The state reserves the power to license and tolerate one or more religions upon its own conditions and subject to state controls, regulation, and supervision.

The Roman Empire believed in religious toleration. It regarded religion as good for public morale and morals, and it therefore had a system of licensure and regulation. New religions were ordered to appear before a magistrate, affirm the lordship or sovereignty of Caesar, and walk away with a license to post in their meeting-place.

The early church refused licensure, because it meant the lordship of Caesar over Christ and His church. The early church refused toleration, because it denied the right of the state to say whether or not Christ's church could exist, or to set the conditions of its existence. The early church rejected religious toleration for religious liberty.

Over the centuries, both Catholics and then Protestants often fought for religious liberty. Over the centuries also, the churches too often capitulated to religious toleration, with very evil results. Toleration was productive of fearful evils. First, one church was tolerated and established by the state, not by Christ, as the "privileged" or state-tolerated institution. This "privilege" called for concessions to the state.

These took a variety of forms. It could mean that the state appointed or controlled the bishops (Protestant of Catholic). It meant that only the state could give permission for a meeting of the church's national convention or general assembly. In a variety of ways, establishment meant an establishment under the state's control. At its best, the church was turned into a privileged house-slave; at its worst, the church was simply a part of the bureacracy, and the working pastors were rare and alone. Sooner or later, an establishment meant subservience and bondage to the state.

Second, the tolerated church became a parasite, because it was dependent too often on state aid to collect its tithes and dues. It lived, not because of the faith of the people, but because of the state's subsidy. As a result, the state church served the state, not the Lord, nor the Lord's people. (When the states turned humanistic and, losing interest in their captive churches, began to cut their "privileges" and subsidies, revivals broke out in many established churches as a result!)

Third, the tolerated or established church became a persecuting church. It could not compete with its now illegal rivals in faith, and so it used the state to persecute its competitors. Both Catholic and Protestant establishments built up an ugly record in this respect. Meanwhile, their humanist foes could criticize their intolerance and speak of this inhumanity as a necessary aspect of Christianity!

Fourth, religious toleration leads to intolerance, as it should now be apparent. Toleration is licensure; it is a state subsidy, and those prossessing it want a monopoly. Hence, intoleration of competitors results, and the church becomes blind to all issues save monopoly. In 17th century England, for example, the blindness of the Church of England under Archbishop Laud, as he fought the Puritans, was staggering. However, when Cromwell came to power, the Presbyterians became a one-issue party, the issue being the control and possession of the Church of England. Had they triumphed, the evils of Laud would have been reproduced. Cromwell balked them; later, the Presbyterians undermined the Commonwealth and helped bring in the depraved Charles II, who quickly ejected them from the Church of England.

In Colonial America, uneasy semi-establishments existed. Technically, the Church of England was the established church for all the crown realms, including Catholic Ireland. (Ireland was never more Catholic than after England imposed an alien church on the land!) Carl Bridenbaugh, in "Mitre and Sceptre" (1962), showed how the fear and threat of a full-scale establishment with American bishops alarmed Americans and led to the War of Independence. Meanwhile, in the colonies, men began to oppose religious toleration in favor of religious liberty. Here, the Baptists were most important, especially Isaac Backus.

Backus declared, "We view it to be our incumbent duty to render unto Caesar the things that are his but also that it is of as much importance not to render unto him anything that belongs only to God, who is to be obeyed rather than any man. And as it is evident that God always claimed it as his sole prerogative to determine by his own laws what his worship shall be, who shall minister in it, and how they shall be supported, so it is evident that this prerogative has been, and still is, encroached upon in our land." (Wm. J. McLounglin, editor: Isaac Backus on Church, State, and Calvinism, Pamphlets, 1754–1789, p. 317. Harvard University Press, 1956.) The defenders of establishment or toleration became, Backus said, "Caesar's friend," citing the Pharisees who said to Rome's magistrates about Jesus, "If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend" (John 19:12). We cannot make the state the definer of man's duty to God, as the establishment-toleration position does. This position, Backus held, takes matters of faith from the conscience of man to the councils of state and thus undermines true faith. Backus saw that the new country would have no unity if establishment and toleration became lawful in the Federal Union. Backus quoted Cotton Mather, who said, "Violences may bring the erroneous to be hypocrites, but they will never bring them to be believers." The heart of Baukus' position was this: "Religion (meaning Biblical religion) was prior to all states and kingdoms in the world and therefore could not in its nature be subject to human laws" (p. 432).

The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, replacing religious toleration and establishment with religious liberty, was the result of the work of Backus and many other churchmen. It represented a great and key victory in church history.

Now, however, religious liberty is dead in the United States. It only exists if you confine it to the area between your two ears. Instead of religious liberty, we have religious toleration. Now, religious toleration is the reality of the situation in Red China and Red Russia. In both cases, the toleration is very, very limited. In the United States, the toleration is still extensive, and most churchmen fail to recognize that the states and the federal government are insisting that only toleration, not liberty, exists, and the limits of that toleration are being narrowed steadily.

Thus, Senator Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina has given expression to the position of the regulators and tolerationists, writing (2–19–82), "Tax exemption is a privilege, not a right. It is not only proper but Constitutional that the government condition that privilege on the Constitutional requirement of nondiscrimination. Religious freedom is a priceless heritage that must be jealously guarded. But when religious belief is contrary to the law of the land then it is the law, not religion, that must be sustained. The 1964 Civil Rights Act provided there be no discrimination in institutions receiving Federal financial assistance and the courts have interpreted this to mean that no public monies be appropriated directly or indirectly through tax exemption to those institutions that discriminate" (Letter by Hollings, re: the Reagan bill S2024, to control Christian Schools).

Sen. Hollings has, with many, many other members of Congress, first, replaced religious liberty with state toleration. Tax exemption originally meant no jurisdiction by the state over the church, because the power to tax is the power to control and destroy. Now, these humanistic statists tell us it is a subsidy! Tax exemption is called "Federal financial assistance," and the courts hold that controls must follow assistance from the civil treasury. This means a mandate to control churches, and every facet of their existence, including Christian Schools, colleges, seminaries, employees, etc., in the name of controlling federal grants!

Second, Hollings (and others, including many judges) hold that this means that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 must take priority over the First Amendment. The Civil Rights laws forbid descrimination in terms of race, and also a number of other things, including creed. The evidence is accumulating that federal authorities believe that they have now the legal right to require churches to ordain women, and homosexuals; on January 26, 1982, to a group of us meeting with Edwin Meese and 8 or 10 Justice Department lawyers in the White House, Meese (a Lutheran layman!) said flatly that this was within the legitimate power of the federal government. This means that the church, in terms of the same laws, can be forbidden to discriminate with respect to creed! This would mean equal time for all creeds, including humanism and atheism, in every church. In the Worldwide Church of God case, the court held that a church and its assets belongs, not to the members thereof, but to all people, all citizens!

Third, the position of Hollings; Reagan; before him, Carter; the Justice Department; the Internal Revenue Service; the Labor Department; the Treasury Department; and the several states is that the only "freedom" that the church can have is that activity which the state chooses to tolerate. Toleration on any and all activities is subject to regulation, controls, and oversight.

This is, of course, totalitarianism. The fact is that religious liberty is dead and buried; it needs to be resurrected. We cannot begin to cope with our present crisis until we recognize that religious liberty has been replaced with religious toleration. The limits of that toleration are being steadily narrowed. If Christians are silent today, the Lord will not be silent towards them when they face the judgment of His Supreme Court. There is a war against Biblical faith, against the Lord, and the men waging that war masquerade it behind the facade of non-discrimination, subsidies, legitimate public interest, and so on.

All this done in the name of one of the most evil doctrines of our time: public policy. Nothing contrary to public policy should have tax exemption, and, some hold, any right to exist. Today, public policy includes homosexual "rights," abortion, an established humanism, and much, much more. The implication is plain and, with some, it is a manifesto: No one opposing public policy has any rights. The public policy doctrine is the new face of totalitarianism. It has all the echoes of tyrannies old and new, and with more muscles.

What is increasingly apparent is that the triune God of Scripture, the Bible itself, and all faith grounded thereon, are contrary to public policy. Christianity has no place in our state schools and universities; it does not inform the councils of state; every effort by Christians to affect the political process is called a violation of the First Amendment and "the separation of church and state." Our freedom of religion is something to be tolerated only if we keep it between our two ears. A war has been declared against us, and we had better know it, and we had better stand and fight before it is too late.

We may be able to live under religious toleration, but it will beget all the ancient evils of compromise, hypocrisy, and a purely or largely public religion. It will replace conscience with a state license, and freedom with a state-endowed cell of narrow limits. This is the best that toleration may afford us in the days ahead.

But the Lord alone is God, and He does not share His throne with the state. If we surrender to Caesar, we will share in Caesar's judgment and fall. If we stand with the Lord, we shall stand in His Spirit and power. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Gal. 5:1). At the heart of that yoke of bondage is the belief and fear that the powers of man (and the state) are greater than the power of God. It is bondage to believe that man can prevail, or that man can frustrate God's sovereign and holy purpose. The only real question is this: will we be a part of the world's defeat and judgment, or a part of the Lord's Kingdom and victory?

WHO MAKES CHURCHES TAX-EXEMPT?

(By Dr. Douglas F. Kelly)

The Tax exempt status of Churches is becoming a major controversy in the United States. Many are asking the question: What right does the Church have to be exempt from taxation anyway?

Of course a matter such as taxation or exemption of the Church is first of all an historical question. One has to look at the historical context in order to give a proper interpretation of our present status. It is clear that religiously, culturally, legally, politically, etc. the American colonies are the direct extension of Medieval, Christian Europe—particularly as this tradition was mediated through the Protestant Reformation of the 16th century and the Puritan movement of the late 16th and 17th centuries.

An illustration of this relationship is the fact that English Common Law precedents are binding in American practice unless they are specifically set aside by American Law. For instance, the Federal Courts claimed treasure that one Mr. Fisher had found in a sunken Spanish Galleon off the coast of Florida belonged to the Federal Government on the basis of British precedent. Supposedly, the Federal Government is an heir to the rights of King George III over all treasure found in coastal waters. We may not agree with this particular interpretation, but it is an illustration of the fact that American jurisprudence cannot be understood without the European and English background.

Now to come specifically to tax exemption of the Christian Church. In the Roman Empire, when the Church first came into prominence, it was treated by the Roman civil authorities as a legitimate Jewish sect, and as such, the Church (like the Jewish religion) was (in the equivalent of that day) fully "tax exempt." However after the Fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, Judaism for a time was no longer a "religio licita" and this brought Christianity as well as Judaism into serious trouble legally. The real problem was not that the Roman government wanted to tax the Church (they apparently did not), but rather that they (from time to time) wanted Christians to swear by the genius of the Emperor: i.e. to sacrifice to him as being the world's center of unity and final Lord over all (including the Church). Rome was perfectly happy for the Church to exist as long as the Church recognized that Caesar is final Lord over the Church: the one who makes it "licita" or licensed. Most Christians refused to do so and accepted persecution and death in order to acknowledge Christ as Lord over all (including Caesar).

This situation of conflict radically changed with the Christian Emperor Constantine, who made Christianity the official state religion. Under the Constantinian settlement (and this was thoroughly backed up the later influential Theodosian and Justinian Codes, which had so much authority in shaping legislation in all the Christian countries of Medieval Europe), the civil government had absolutely no authority to tax churches. They did not actually make churches tax exempt: they rather recognized that they already were such by virtue of the fact that churches paid taxes (tithes and offerings) to their head: Jesus Christ, while the state paid taxes to its temporal head: Caesar and his successors.

Sometimes tithes were collected for the Church by the civil authorities (as is still the case in West Germany), but these tithes went to the local churches and/or to the Pope in Rome. In these cases therefore the civil government collected taxes (tithes) not from the Church, but from the populace, and then gave the tithes to the Church.

Now there was an exception in Medieval Europe during the Crusades, in which the Church itself asked the civil authorities to tax Church income in order to finance this movement. This was known as the "Saladin Tithe." C. W. Previte-Orton in "The Shorter Cambridge Medieval History" (Cambridge: At The University Press, 1971), p. 618, explains:

"The Crusades, on which depended so much of the moral leadership of the West assumed by the Papacy, were financed in two ways: by indulgences, which were commutations of the vow to go on a crusade in return for money payment, a measure productive of perilous extension and abuse in all directions, and by the taxation of ecclesiastical income by kings with the consent of the Papacy, begun by Louis VI of France (1146) and repeated in England and France by the Saladin Tithe (1188), which under Innocent III developed into the claim to dispose of all Church property and to tax it at will (i.e. the will of the Pope), while excluding the lay powers (i.e. the kings) from like behaviour. Further expedients by the Papacy to pay its way were to be devised in the next century.

In other words, with the exception of the Saladin Tithe, the problems and struggles over taxatio. of local and national Churches during the Middle Ages was an inter-Church battle to a major degree: between an increasingly strong Papacy, and local Bishops. Civil governments at this point had no thought of attempting to interfere and 'put their hands in the till'. (Civil governments were intensely involved in struggles with the Papacy over matters such as lay investiture, but this is on a different level, for powerful church officials who were to be 'invested' were often also powerful temporal lords).

In England, just before the Reformation, King Henry VIII did forcibly close down monasteries and confiscate their lands and wealth: on the supposed basis that the monasteries were dens of corruption and a hazard to the well being of the nation. The same thing happened in France after the French Revolution. However, the civil authorities still did not attempt to tax the Churches: closing the monasteries (as they saw it) was a police act, and, at least in England, was not used as a precedent to claim state authority to levy taxes on the remaining Church property and revenues.

At the time the American colonies were settled, the same Medieval situation still obtained between Church and State (even after the Reformation and Puritan movement): the Church was universally understood to owe its taxes (tithes) to its spiritual head, Christ, and thus was by definition free from civil control at this point since it was the spiritual realm or Kingdom of God on earth.

Therefore when we speak of tax exemption today, it is not a matter of trying to find some ancient obscure law that specifically states the Church has been declared (or made) tax exempt by the state: all history presupposes the independent financial status of the Church. Such was the accepted procedure of all Europe for a millenium and a half. The burden of proof is on the other side: let those who want to tax the Church find substantial historical or legal precedents for doing so. To use a rather silly illustration, who needs to prove that the public has the right to breathe free air without paying the civil government fo doing so? Our right to do so is presupposed by all history and common sense. To claim we must have specific legislative action to make legal all we do is ridiculous: in most cases, to determine what is right, rather than researching volumes of statute legislation, one has to look at the whole human, moral, and historical situation.

Up until the Enlightenment, civil states knew that passing legislation for something like tax exemption of Churches would be as superfluous as voting to allow Christ to be Lord in his own realm. What the state did was to recognize Christ as Lord over his Church: they did not legislate to make him so: they simply accepted that as a previously existing situation. With the late 18th century, secular humanist Enlightenment, some states (such as France after 1789) did indeed begin to claim sovereignty (including financial control) over the Church: but America was already a free country by this time with its own constitution, rooted—not in the humanist Enlightenment—but in the earlier Medieval, Reformation Christian order. We had no problems along these lines in this country until this same secular humanist Enlightenment reached these shores in the late 19th century. The Enlightenment attempts to cut ties with the past under the very modern pretense that every legitimate situation must rest upon specific statute legislation by the contemporary state or its legislative predecessors. They however are clearly the innovators and cannot be supported under American and British Common Law jurisprudence taken in its easy-to-understand historical context.

RESCUE AT SEA

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, last week Mr. Peter Ford, harbormaster of the town of Chatham, brought to my attention an editorial appearing in the Cape Cod Chronicle which describes the valiant efforts of our Coast Guard to secure the rescue of five fishermen from their foundering vessel. I want to share with my colleagues this fine editorial because it describes so clearly the Coast Guard's value to those of us residing in coastal areas.

RESCUE AT SEA

It's days like Monday of this week when we wince to think of the politicians noodling around with Coast Guard appropriations. On that day, five middled-aged New Bedford fishermen were taken off their foundering vessel near Chatham by an efficient and highly skilled Coast Guard search and rescue crew. The ease with which this rescue was accomplished belies the difficulty involved.

A hard-nosed and unknowing pencil-pusher might argue the men could have made it to shore on their own, without Coast Guard assistance—their fast-filling vessel was only a half-mile offshore and in comparatively shoal water. We would ask that pencil-pusher to look at the very condition of the water that rolled between the stricken vessel and the nearest shore, the tip of North Beach. Even with a serviceable smallboat, the fishermen would have been hard put to have made it to shore on their own. As well, the famous tidal patterns at the entrance to Chatham Harbor would have worked against the men. Another inexperienced politician might have argued that any one of several passing Chatham fishing vessels could have effected the rescue. Certainly, these local seamen have years of boathandling experience and could have maneuvered, as did the Coast Guard, under the lee of the fishing vessel and brought the men aboard. While we do not question the courage or expertise of local skippers, we doubt any would have attempted the rescue because of the legal ramifications in this litigious age if anything were to have gone wrong.

Instead, it was—as it should always be—the Coast Guard which provided the life-saving service. The money we, as taxpayers, spend on the Coast Guard is for just this purpose—to save lives and property at sea, whenever and wherever possible. our money is being spent to train these seafaring technicians and to equip them. While the equipment isn't as much as it used to be and while budgetary cutbacks have crippled the effectiveness of some of the Coast Guard's floating stock, dedicated maintenance by ingenious personnel is keeping more of this fleet in workable condition than the nation has any right to expect.

Certainly ours is a regional point of view, and we can understand why it might not be supported by taxpayers in the landlocked mid-West. But the exhausted relief etched on the faces of those five fishermen Monday bears testimony to public monies wisely and humanely spent.●

AMENDING THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today amending the Bankruptcy Act to provide that judgment debts resulting from a liability which is based on driving while intoxicated shall not be discharged.

The need for this legislation was recently brought to my attention by a heart-rending situation involving a family in my district whose daughter was fatally injured 4 years ago by a drunk driver. My constituents filed a civil suit against the driver, which was finally heard in March of this year. The court awarded them $110,000 for "wrongful death" and survivor's compensation. However, the defendant is now attempting to file for bankruptcy, trying to have his judgment debt discharged by using Federal bankruptcy law.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents must now face the reality that the man who tragically ended their daughter's life may be excused from the judgment debt by using Federal bankruptcy laws. But it is not the money involved that has shattered their faith in our judicial system; rather, it is the principle that the man that recklessly killed their daughter might be able to use the bankruptcy law to escape punishment.

This case is distinctly different from regular bankruptcy cases, since my constituents certainly did not extend credit or ask payment for services rendered. The legislation I am introducing today will provide victims and their families with an assurance that if they win civil damages against a drunk driver, the driver will not be able to use Federal law to avoid paying his debt.

Current bankruptcy law does contain a provision (11 U.S.C. 523(a)(6)) which prohibits a debtor from discharging any debt he owes for willful and malicious injury. However, the problem is that some bankruptcy judges have concluded that drunk driving is not "willful and malicious." In a recently decided bankruptcy case, In re Joseph Anthony Cooney, it was held that this provision rendered a defendant's judgment debt to a plaintiff nondischargeable.

In the case, the plaintiff was accosted by a defendant who was intoxicated. The plaintiff obtained a judgment for $50,000 in actual damages which she alleged was not a dischargeable debt because it was the result of a willful and malicious injury. The debtor's defense that he suffered an alcoholic blackout, and as a result did not remember the incident. The court held that he had acted with malicious intent at the time of the incident. While that case involves an assault rather than a car accident, it seems to highlight the need to take swift action to classify tortious acts committed while intoxicated as willful and malicious acts.

This legislation was originally introduced by Senator DANFORTH as S. 2159, and I commend him for his action to help remedy this tragic abuse of Federal bankruptcy law.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that drunk driving is a problem which we cannot ignore and which desperately deserves prompt Federal attention. While I am aware that this legislation will not put a stop to the grim tragedies taking place on our Nation's highways, I hope that it will be effective as one method to deter drunk drivers.●

BALANCED MONETARY POLICY ACT OF 1982 (H.R. 6967)

HON. KENT HANCE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. HANCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 6967, the Balanced Monetary Policy Act of 1982.

For the past 34 months, the Federal Reserve Board's policy of tight money has strangled the economy and prohibited any economic recovery. Under the Fed's tight money grip, interest rates have grown dramatically. And with each interest rate increase, we see more businesses failing, more jobs lost, more people unable to realize their dream of homeownership, and the inevitable pain and suffering associated with such actions.

This bill would require the Fed to set interest rate targets—targets that businesses and families can use in their long-range planning and decisionmaking. Congress needs to send the signal to the Federal Reserve that interest rates must be taken into consideration by that body for the good of all Americans.

It is high time for the Federal Reserve Board to look past just counting the money supply and start looking at the dismal impact its policies have had on every individual in this Nation.

The Balanced Monetary Policy Act of 1982 will force the Fed to take interest rates into consideration and report to Congress accordingly. I support the bill and urge my colleagues to join me.●

THE CRIME CONTROL AND VICTIMS' COMPENSATION ACT OF 1982

HON. DONALD JOSEPH ALBOSTA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced the Crime Control and Victims' Compensation Act of 1982, H.R. 7001.

This legislation addresses several basic problems in the criminal justice system by providing a sure sentence for certain types of serious offenders; by providing that these offenders work to pay for their keep and to compensate their victims for the harm they have suffered; and by helping States to care for victims of crimes not specifically covered in this bill.

We hear over and over about crimes committed by repeat offenders who are out on parole or released after light sentences. We hear that this is due in part to a lack of prison space and in part to a lack of clear and direct guidance from those who write the laws. We also know that the poor and the elderly, those who can least afford to be victims of crime, are its most frequent victims. The impact of crime is not just local and not just personal. Crime raises insurance rates and the prices of goods for all of us. It raises the overall costs of Government at every level. The longer we fail to deal with serious and repeating offenders, the more they are encouraged to strike again. Yet it is not enough just to lock the door and throw away the key. Unless we provide for the innocent victims of crime, then justice is not done even if we punish for past crimes and prevent future crimes.

In light of these concerns and the increasingly interstate nature of crime and its impact, I believe it is time for the Congress to take the initiative. The Crime Control and Victims' Compensation Act would create a Federal mandatory life sentence for three of the most serious classes of offenders. These are: Persons who commit first degree murder with a weapon, those who commit three felonies while carrying a gun, and those who sell $500 or more worth of controlled substances. This sentence would be applied to those who violate either State or Federal law.

The bill requires that these offenders work to pay for their keep and to compensate victims. A recent poll of my district shows that of those responding, 93 percent favor requiring criminals to pay back victims of crime and to perform public service jobs.

In order to provide facilities for housing and employing these prisoners, my bill authorizes the Attorney General to issue bonds to pay for any construction needed. This section completes title I, concerning Federal prisons and criminal law.

Title II was approved by the Judiciary Committee of the House in February of 1980. It provides grants to States with programs to compensate victims. This would cover most crimes not covered by title I.

This is a criminal justice bill that offers greater protection for every citizen.

A summary and a section-by-section review follow:

H.R. 7001—CRIME CONTROL AND VICTIMS' COMPENSATION ACT OF 1982

SUMMARY

In light of the fact that serious and repeated offenses have an impact on every sector of society, including interstate commerce, through increased insurance rates, public health expenditures, judicial time and expense, and the general mental and physical well-being of the victims, the community, and the nation, I have drafted legislation to correct some of the most basic problems in our criminal justice system.

The key elements of my bill are provisions to:

(1) Sentence 1st Degree murderers and certain 3-time felons to life imprisonment without parole;

(2) Compensate victims or their families for harm done; and

(3) Make the guilty persons work to pay for their keep and for victims' compensation.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

REAFFIRM OUR COMMITMENT TO HANDICAPPED CITIZENS

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Congress must act to reaffirm our commitment to handicapped citizens. It is imperative that we oppose this administration's attacks on legislative support for handicapped Americans.,

When the Rehabilitation Act was passed in 1973, section 504 became the cornerstone of legislation for the handicapped. Its passage helped promote equal opportunity for handicapped persons in such areas as public transportation, education, building accessibility, and employment. Since then, new statutes and regulations have reflected a new public consciousness and sense of responsibility toward those whose potential had been wasted for so long due to widespread ignorance and misconceptions. Section 504 has fostered a more enlightened and respectful approach to the handicapped.

For some time now, the Reagan administration has been working to dilute these guarantees. It has pushed the Department of Justice and the Office of Management and Budget to revise section 504 regulations to permit the Federal Government to escape from its responsibilities to the handicapped. In addition, the administration has targeted preschool incentive programs, the vocational rehabilitation program, and the developmental disabilities program with funding reductions and weakening regulatory changes. The cumulative effect of the administration's proposals would be to render major handicapped legislation meaningless and inoperative.

In a particularly odious move, the Department of Education has proposed changes for the Education for All Handicapped Children Act, Public Law 94-142. since this law was enacted in 1977, millions of children have received the education necessary to become self-sufficient and self-respecting members of society. Not only would the regulations virtually eliminate any standards for the Government and school boards to follow when evaluating and educating handicapped children, but they would also alienate parents from these same processes. In the belief that handicapped education is no place for the laissez-faire doctrine, I have cosponsored an emergency resolution opposing the Department of Education's proposals.

The cost/benefit analysis that the administration has applied in evaluating these regulations for the handicapped is economically as well as morally irresponsible, for it fails to appreciate the reciprocity inherent in handicapped programs. Educational and employment opportunities will shape what any citizen can offer the larger community in return. Our society is committed to providing all its members with access to these avenues of development. We had learned that handicapped programs can foster the independence necessary for handicapped persons to become productive citizens. In many instances, our expectations of the handicapped need be no less than those made of other citizens. We must not go back on a promise which has given us the opportunity to discover this. Miscalculating our real gains from these programs traps us into a self-fulfilling prophesy: The less we invest in the handicapped, the less we will receive from them in return.

I urge my colleagues to oppose these moves to betray our handicapped citizens. Instead, we should encourage a healthier and more reciprocal relationship between these individuals and the communities in which they live.●

RETURNING PRAYER TO PUBLIC SCHOOLS WITHOUT AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION

HON. STEPHEN L. NEAL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, there is considerable enthusiasm at this time for a constitutional amendment that would return prayer to the public schools. According to the poll results that I have seen, about 75 percent of the people of America are for putting prayer back in the classroom, and from conversations with my own constituents and mail from them, I would say that at least that percentage of them would favor it also.

If a constitutional amendment were the only way to accomplish this purpose, I certainly would be obligated to vote to send it to the States for ratification. I do not believe, however, that a constitutional amendment for this purpose is necessary. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is another way, a better way. I testified earlier this week on this subject before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and at this point would like to place in the RECORD the testimony I presented to this distinguished committee. A copy of my proposed legislation, House Concurrent Resolution 1, is also included.

TESTIMONY OF THE HONORABLE STEPHEN L. NEAL

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before the Committee to discuss the issue of voluntary prayer in the public schools—and, specifically, my resolution (H. Con. Res. 1) dealing with that subject.

I have followed the proceedings of the Committee and the previous hearings in the House with intense interest because of both my personal concern about the school prayer controversy, and that of my constituency in North Carolina. It is an issue that is very much alive in the press and much alive in the minds and hearts of the people in North Carolina.

There are a number of proposals pending that attempt to return prayer to the public schools. The Committee is considering a proposed constitutional amendment which supporters feel would remove the bar against individual and group prayer. Legislation has also been introduced that would strip the federal courts of the authority to hear cases involving voluntary prayer. You have indeed heard eloquent and reasonable arguments from advocates and opponents of both approaches. Those who would formalize prayer in the classroom have pursued their objective with vigor; those who oppose it, with equal conviction. I say, Mr. Chairman, that there is a third approach wherein we may find an accommodation of the other two—that is, those who say we cannot, and those who say we must, pray in the public schools. The answer, contained in my resolution—which I will discuss at some length later—is that we can if we want to.

First, it is necessary, I believe, to clear up some of the misconceptions that exist concerning the Supreme Court's decision regarding prayer in the schools.

We know, of course, that the Court has not ruled out voluntary prayer in the schools. It has stated only that such prayer cannot be required, written, or supervised by the state or its representative—that is, the administrators or the faculties of the public schools. Yet, while voluntary prayer is permissible, there has been great difficulty in formulating a recitative prayer, and a prayer period, that do not exceed the limits set by the court.

Second, this misunderstanding of the Court's rulings has created in the minds of many people the idea that the Supreme Court banned prayer in the schools, and in so doing has denied, rather than protected, their rights under the First Amendment. The misconception has led to the widespread belief that "God has been expelled from the classroom."

The result has been both understandable and predictable. I have seen poll data which indicate that some 80 percent of Americans believe prayer in the schools should be permitted. That implies, of course, that 80 percent believe it is not permissible. The idea that one is not free to pray wherever and whenever one chooses is offensive to all Americans who cherish our fundamental freedoms, and especially to those who find in our religious tradition a course of great comfort and pride.

This concern has led, I firmly believe, to suggested solutions which are unnecessary, and if carried to fruition could be intolerable. I have in mind the proposed constitutional amendment under consideration today. The Committee has heard much testimony about this amendment, but I would beg your indulgence of some further thoughts on the subject.

The proposed constitutional amendment strikes at the very foundation of our constitutional form of government. It would compromise that most basic guaranty of our individual rights—the First Amendment—which was appended by men of clear vision and noble purpose. That purpose, simply stated, was to guarantee that government shall in no way control religious thought, speech, or practice. Further, it also guarantees that religion shall not control the state, and through government impose the religious preferences of one persuasion upon a lesser number who do not completely agree with it. This we call the separation of church and state. It has served both constituencies extremely well.

Mr. Chairman, this constitutional doctrine was not established either easily or by chance. Powerful forces argued against it. I think we have to thank Thomas Jefferson and James Madison for insisting that it be part of our Constitution. Especially Mr. Jefferson, who fought this battle in the Virginia House of Burgesses, which ultimately established his Bill of Establishing Religious Freedom. It should be noted that only three accomplishments adorn the grave marker of Mr. Jefferson. That statute is one of them. He asked, also, to be remembered as author of the Declaration of Independence and founder of the University of Virginia.

Permit me to quote from Mr. Jefferson, and from his biographers, some of his observations about freedom and separation of church and state:

From Saul K. Padover's "Jefferson: A Great American's Life and Ideas":

"In few things was Jefferson more consistent than in his advocacy of religious liberty, or more resolute than in his hatred of religious tyranny. He went farther than those who merely believed in toleration. Mere toleration. was a lazy man's creed; it meant indifference toward the political problems involved in the religious question. Toleration, therefore, was not enough. What Jefferson wanted, and ultimately achieved, was liberty—liberty fully protected by the law, to believe or not to believe whatever a man saw fit; liberty of the genuine Protestant variety, for a man and his conscience to care for his soul in his own fashion."

And from Mr. Jefferson's "Notes on Religion," penned shortly after he wrote the Declaration of Independence:

"The care of every man's soul belongs to himself. . . . God himself will not save men against their wills. . . . I cannot give up my guidance to the magistrates, because he knows no more of the way to heaven than I do, and is less concerned to direct me right than I am to go right."

Mr. Jefferson in that instance was concerned about the state being in charge of religion. He was equally if not more concerned about the church being in charge of the state. Assailed by the stinging criticism of some members of the clergy, he wrote to a friend:

"They (the clergy) believe that any portion of power confided to me, will be exerted in opposition to their schemes. And they believe rightly; for I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man."

The last clause of that immortal statement is familiar to everyone who visits the Jefferson Memorial, for it is engraved in the marble there. The basic issue in his time, as in ours, was separation of church and state.

I would not contend, Mr. Chairman, that conditions have not changed since Mr. Jefferson's day. I would submit, however, that our need to be free has not changed; that it took many more years after the First Amendment was ratified to establish religious freedom uniformly throughout the states; and that we ought not to surrender one inch of the ground which our forebears struggled to gain for themselves and their posterity.

Former Senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr., a distinguished Constitutional scholar, felt just as strongly as did the Founding Fathers that the separation of church and state must remain absolute, and in 1966 he argued forcefully and long against the Dirksen and Bayh proposals to amend the Constitution so as to reestablish prayer in the classroom. A telling point in Senator Ervin's argument was his observation that the Supreme Court's opinions, as he interpreted them, did not deal with the subject of voluntary prayer. "All they do is to hold that under the establishment of religion clause, the State cannot require religious exercises to be conducted in the public schools," he said.

Mr. Chairman, these distinguished Americans were absolutely right. If the state were to be given power to make us pray, it would have equal power to stop us from praying. The Constitution declares that the state does not have the power to make us do either.

But the problem remains. The people of America want prayer in the schools, and they believe their government is prohibiting it.

I would argue that my resolution (H. Con. Res. 1) would solve the problem. This resolution confirms, (1) that the Supreme Court decisions did not prohibit periods of silence for the purpose of private prayer, meditation, contemplation, or introspection; and (2) that local school authorities can now provide such periods of silence under the law. I respectfully urge the Committee to consider this approach for the following reasons:

(1) It would clear up the misconception that the Supreme Court decision of 1962 prohibits prayer in the public schools, and that government (the Supreme Court) has expelled God from the classroom. The lack of a clear expression on the permissibility of voluntary prayer has had a "chilling" effect on local school boards which, upon passage of the resolution, would receive both guidance and encouragement to provide the opportunity for voluntary prayer in the schools.

(2) It would help restore the public's trust in government, and in the democractic process, which many have come to doubt as concerns the issue of prayer in the public schools.

(3) It would inspire widespread discussions between students, their parents, and religious leaders of all religions and all denominations as to how the "periods of silence" suggested in House Con. Res. 1 should be filled. In my opinion, such healthy discussion among all Americans contains, at the very least, the possibility of an understanding that reaches beyond the temporal and the transitory. Perhaps it would result in a heightened spirit of unity, while maintaining diversity; perhaps a higher awareness of man's relationship to this Creator and to his fellowman; perhaps a higher level of trust, tolerance, and understanding among ourselves.

(4) Finally, the passage of this resolution would restore truly voluntary prayer to the public schools, by which the majority might confirm, with no threat to or infringement of the rights of the minority, our Nation's motto, "In God We Trust."

H. CON. RES. 1

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of Congress—

(1) that the Constitution of the United States does not preclude periods of silence to be used, solely at the discretion of the individual student in public schools, for quiet and private prayer, meditation, contemplation, or introspection, even if these moments are supervised by a school official; and

(2) that public school authorities should recognize the historic importance of religion to our civilization by encouraging such periods of silence.●

YAKOV AND TATIANA KOGAN

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to the plight of Yakov and Tatiana Kogan, two Soviet refusniks who have been denied permission to emigrate to Israel for the past 6 years. Yakov and Tatiana are of special concern to me because they have been adopted by the Jewish community in my district of Sacramento, Calif.

Yakov Kogan was a member of the Soviet Army until 1969 when he completed his service. Because of this security clearance, Yakov agreed to sign a document stating he would be unable to go abroad for 5 years. Six years later when he applied for permission to emigrate, however, Yakov was refused on the basis of his army service. His application was turned down again 6 months later.

Yakov's wife, Tatiana, lost her job when it was learned that she and her husband had applied for emigration visas.

It is my hope that through our efforts here in Congress and through concern shown by communities across the Nation, the Kogans and other Soviet Jews will finally be given permission to leave the Soviet Union.●

TRIBUTE TO JOHN SONNEBORN, JR.

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, only once in a great while is a community blessed with having a rare individual who not only devotes full time to the job at which he earns his living, but who devotes equally of his talents and energy to his community. San Pedro has been blessed by such a man in John G. Sonneborn, Jr.

John Sonneborn is a man of restless, dynamic energy. If he sees something wrong, he wants to correct it. If he sees something that can be done better, he wants to assist in doing it better. If he sees a fellow citizen not as fortunate as himself in need, he is the one who steps forward and wants to help him.

John was originally an easterner, having graduated from Germantown Friends School in Philadelphia, Pa. He then attended Swarthmore College and Temple University before coming to USC in Los Angeles. Not content with baccalaureate diplomas, he went on to the UCLA Graduate School of Business, and has taken courses at the Los Angeles Harbor College. He holds a Los Angeles college teaching credential.

After service in World War II as a major in the U.S. Air Force, he spent a short time with Consolidated Steel and the Union Bank, settling with Pacific Telephone Co. in July of 1949. Except for a period of time when he again donned his country's uniform in the Korean war, John remained with Pacific Telephone & Telegraph, for many years as district manager for the South Bay area, from July 1949 until July 1981, when he went on a year's leave of absence to be foreman of the Los Angeles County grand jury. Those of you who have kept up with the local and national news on TV and in the press have heard and seen John's exploits as the foreman of the jury, as several sensational cases attracting nationwide attention were handled under his foremanship.

I mentioned his involvement in community activities; John has been a past president of no less than six such organizations. They are the Los Angeles Civitan Club, San Pedro Lions Club, San Pedro Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles County Probation Commission, Los Angeles Harbor College Foundation, and, for almost 10 years, the San Pedro Peninsula Hospital Foundation. He is an active member of the Los Angeles Police Foundation, continues as a board member of the San Pedro Peninsula Hospital, is first vice president of the Los Angeles County Affairs of Aging, and is on the executive committee of the Affiliated Committees on Aging, Inc. He works as an active consultant for the Small Business Administration. And on top of all that, until reaching retirement age, he remained active in the Air Force Reserve.

Mr. Speaker, to list the numerous commendations, awards, and recognitions that John has received will demand too much of your time and those of my colleagues. Suffice to say they are many.

This past month John completed his year's tour as foreman of the Grand Jury, and on the 27th of this month will officially retire from the Pacific Telephone Telegraph Co., but John will never retire. I know that the organizations in which he serves will continue to receive the benefit of his advice. I know he will continue doing many fine things for his community. And, above all, I know John will continue looking for more things to do.

My wife Lee joins me in congratulating John Sonneborn for his many achievements and we thank him for all he has contributed to his community. We wish John and his wife Barbara, and their two sons, John III, and Paul Sonneborn, all the best in the years ahead.●

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I join with members of the American-Czech and Slovak communities in observance of the 14th anniversary of the ruthless Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, commonly known as the "Soviet Day of Shame." The consequences of this Soviet action 14 years ago are still being felt and certainly have not left our memories.

On August 21, 1968, the world witnessed a brutal and unprovoked act of military aggression on the Czech nation under the leadership of Alexander Dubcek. Prior to the invasion, Czechoslovakia was making substantial economic strides compared to the other nations dominated by the Soviet Union. Restricted by all the inefficiencies inherent in a centrally planned economy as is the case in all communist countries, Alexander Dubcek attempted to liberalize the nation's overbureaucratized economy by moving toward a free-market system. This attempt at liberalization is commonly known of as "Prague Spring." All hopes of political and economic reform were destroyed when Warsaw Pact forces under Soviet instigation and leadership invaded Czechoslovakia and replaced the Dubcek government with a puppet regime, manipulated from Moscow.

In the 14 years since the invasion, opposition to Soviet domination has never ended. Charter 77, a movement led by Czech intellectuals and other brave citizens, champions the cause of human rights in Czechoslovakia even though the price they must pay for their beliefs are harassment, beatings, and imprisonment. August 21, 1968, shall long be remembered to Czechs and people everywhere as the "Soviet Day of Shame."

The Soviet Union's inexcusable and unlawful intervention into the domestic affairs of other nations represents a gross violation of international law and human decency. We now know that the Soviet Union will not permit deviations from Soviet policy and Communist doctrine among its captive neighbors. The Breznev doctrine, which guarantees Soviet domination over Eastern Europe, is the policy that dictates Soviet actions in the area. Any nation which must bear the presence of the Soviet Red army faces the grim specter of having that powerful force thrust against it at the whim of Moscow. Whenever a captive nation attempts to better the lot of its people or seeks greater independence, the Red army is the instrument used to decimate the hopes of the millions who long for justice and freedom. The day will come when the Soviet Union no longer will be able to use their Red army to depose progressive regimes which are not capable of Soviet-style oppression. No Soviet tank or missile can douse the burning flame for independence and freedom that the Czech people so anxiously desire. Each Czech who has fallen as a victim to Soviet tyranny has not done so in vain, but has made a priceless sacrifice for the Czech people, which will not be forgotten by posterity.

In a country which enjoys freedom and justice, we cannot be blind to the plight of the Czech people who long to live in a democratic and independent society, without the fear of reprisals or internment for advancing the cause of human rights. As Congressman from the Lehigh Valley where many people of eastern European extraction live, I condemn the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia and pray for the day when the Czech and Slovak peoples can determine their own destiny, free from outside intervention. Thank you.●

THE ROLE OF COOPERATIVES IN FOSTERING DEMOCRACY IN THE CARIBBEAN BASIN

HON. MATTHEW F. McHUGH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the current situation in the Caribbean and Central America is complex, with each country in the region facing distinctly different challenges. However, one of the most basic challenges we face is whether it is possible to channel legitimate aspirations for change through democratic political institutions, and thus I do not think it is inappropriate to suggest that what is at stake is the future of democracy in Central America and the Caribbean.

Yesterday the House voted to approve the conference report on H.R. 6863, which included funds to implement the President's Caribbean Basin Initiative. Much of the money contained in H.R. 6863 will be directed to democratic allies, such as Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, and Jamaica. It is our hope that funds for the remainder of the countries that would benefit under this legislation will bolster democratic forces, and thus I supported the bill, Mr. Speaker.

At the same time, I want to stress once again my own view that the root causes of the crisis in this region is the growing aspirations of its people for economic progress and well-being. There can be little doubt that economic stagnation, whether caused by purely economic circumstances such as lower sugar or coffee prices and depressed markets, or by disruptive military and political actions, breeds antidemocratic pressures.

The response from the extreme right is to clamp down on programs, such as land reform, which are essential for economic prosperity for the poor majority. The extreme right argues that the large landholdings of the rich must be maintained for export production. The response from the extreme left is precisely the opposite. They point to continuing poverty and blame capitalism for the ever widening gap between the rich and the poor. They appeal to the landless and the exploited, playing upon the desire of the poor majority to own their own land and the means of production.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, history has shown that the forces of the extreme left can be as antidemocratic as those of the extreme right. When some leftist revolutions succeed, all too often the promises for land evaporate in favor of state farms or other coercive economic instruments. At the same time, the extreme right tends to wait too long as the pressure for land redistribution builds and fuels revolutionary unrest.

The peasant is the person caught in the middle of all of this, Mr. Speaker. While disagreeing with the forces of the extreme right, he typically resists the appeals of the extreme left as long as his situation falls short of being intolerable. He wants his own land, and to be left alone to make a modest living in peace.

Mr. Speaker, I am firmly convinced that there is a unique type of organization which is well suited the meeting the economic needs of the peasant and fits in well with his basic attitudes. I am speaking of cooperatives. Cooperatives and credit unions have been a great success in the United States and a growing phenomena in the developing world. These institutions are geared to the needs of the owners, most often farmers, who own and control them. Each member, no matter what his wealth, has one vote in cooperative decisionmaking and, rather than distribute profits to shareholders, cooperatives put earnings back into operations or into patronage refunds based on individual usage of services or goods purchased from the cooperative. Thus, they are democratic, nongovernmental and nonideological economic businesses which fit the needs of the peasant.

In 1962, an amendment to the Foreign Assistance Act directed the Agency for International Development to promote cooperatives and credit unions overseas. As a result, six cooperative development organizations were created. They are: Agricultural Cooperative Development International, Cooperative Housing Foundation, Cooperative League of the U.S.A., Credit Union National Association (whose global office recently merged with the World Council of Credit Unions), National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, and Volunteer Development Corps.

Each of these organizations began its programs in Latin America in the early 1960's and have created networks of indigenous cooperative structures. In over 20 years of providing U.S. technical assistance, they have helped build a variety of cooperative businesses.

In the new directions legislation of 1974, Congress changed the mission of the Agency for International Development from capital projects to those more directly benefiting the poor. As a result, the focus of cooperative development, and of all development assistance for that matter, shifted from Latin America to Asia and Africa where the vast majority of the desperately poor live. As a result, funds to assist cooperative development in Latin America have dwindled. Fortunately, strong cooperative roots have been started there which, with the additional resources in H.R. 6863, can be made to flourish.

H.R. 6863 represents an opportunity to reinvigorate cooperatives and credit unions in the Caribbean and Central America. U.S. cooperative development organizations have identified over $40 million in immediate needs for training, technical assistance and capital requirements. Cooperatives can directly increase agricultural productivity, the underpinning to the economies of the region. They are a means by which small farmers can pool their resources in purchasing fertilizer, seeds, farm implements, and other inputs; and expand their markets through regional and national cooperatives. In credit unions, farmers and urban residents can save, with the pooled savings available to members for productive uses such as farm credit. Cooperatives make possible adequate housing or electricity which otherwise would not be possible.

The Agricultural Cooperative Development International (ACDI) is now completing over 10 years of assistance to the Federation of Regional Agricultural Cooperatives (FECOAR) in Guatemala. Through FECOAR, ACDI cooperative technicians have helped highland Indians form agricultural cooperatives to make possible their entry into the market economy. While these cooperatives are now endangered by fighting in the countryside, the Indians are holding tenaciously to their own independent cooperatives despite threats and killings of their leaders.

Another FECOAR project, with ACDI help, provides for cooperative colonization in northern Guatemala. In this development project, landless tenants are now being given land and the opportunity to eke out an economic existence in very harsh jungle environments. This region was recently closed because of rebel activity.

Mr. Speaker, these are two examples of where cooperatives remain beacons of democracy and hope. But, like other public institutions, they are threatened by political and military violence. The United States can help sustain these cooperatives and encourage their continued growth through the funds in H.R. 6863 and I hope we will do so.

ACDI is also helping to organize two regional agricultural service cooperatives in Honduras, the poorest Central America country. These cooperatives provide agricultural supplies, short- and medium-term credit, marketing assistance, custom machine work, and technical assistance. ACDI has also been asked to help form cooperatives in support of El Salvador's land reform, but is holding back because of the violence in that nation.

Mr. Speaker, Haiti is the poorest country in our hemisphere. The Cooperative Housing Foundation (CHF) could use funds in H.R. 6863 to expand its 5-year urban self-help shelter and slum upgrading program there for the very-low-income population of Port-au-Prince. CHF could also work with the Haitian Development Foundation to provide cooperative housing in urban areas for its employees. In addition, CHF is interested in developing a cooperative block making enterprise in Haiti for building materials production and distribution. These types of programs can have the positive effect of building democratic institutions which respond to the harsh realities of poverty in Haiti.

Costa Rica is a democratic oasis threatened by violence, Mr. Speaker, and by an economy which is nearly bankrupt. Its new President, Luis Alberto Monge, has called for restructing the Costa Rican economy, especially its agriculture sector. His program is focused on the small farmer through the provision of technical assistance and an expansion of cooperatives. The Cooperative League of the U.S.A. assisted the conversion of the Cooperative Department of the National Bank of Costa Rica into an autonomous agency, the National Institute for Cooperative Development (INFOCOOP). The Cooperative League provided technical assistance to INFOCOOP in organization and administration, marketing, credit operations, and education and training. This has resulted in INFOCOOP providing technical assistance for cooperative projects in dairying, fish marketing, livestock marketing, taxi cooperatives and agricultural marketing operations. INFOCOOP is critical to President Monge's program and funds from H.R. 6863 can play an important role in strengthening this independent cooperative structure.

The National Rural Electric Cooperative Association (NRECA) has built rural power systems in Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras, Panama, and Guatemala as well as in the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Haiti, and other Caribbean countries. One of the casualties of the revolution in Nicaragua was the nationalization of five successful rural electric cooperatives serving over 60,000 farm families. This indicates why cooperatives must not be too closely identified with the government, in this case with former President Somoza.

NRECA-assisted rural cooperatives are serving the electric needs of 30,000 families in Costa Rica. In the Caribbean, there are 22 small utilities, mostly government-controlled and originally started with European investors. All of these systems need help. They are deficit operations needing U.S. training, better audit systems and technical assistance for capital planning and loan applications.

Whether NRECA activities are directed to cooperatives or national electric authorities, their operations are quite similar to U.S. cooperatively run systems. The areas are primarily rural and their scale of operation is quite similar. For example, NRECA has used specialists from the Blue Ridge Electric Cooperative to work in Jamaica for the improvement of the physical plant, a plant almost identical to one in the United States. H.R. 6863 can help bring power to rural areas or address second generation problems of existing systems which must deal with skyrocketing oil prices.

As a result of the Credit Union National Association (CUNA) activities of the 1960's, credit unions have been established throughout Latin America and the Caribbean. National movements in these countries have formed two confederations: The Confederation of Latin American Credit Unions (COLAC) and the Caribbean Confederation of Credit Unions (CCCU). Approximately 700,000 individuals are credit union members in the Caribbean Basin, with nearly $200 million in savings.

This success is largely attributable to the ability of credit unions to provide access to credit. Credit unions help mobilize domestic savings, particularly among those often considered too poor to save and thus frequently denied credit from traditional financial institutions. The resulting credit is often then used for productive or income generating purposes of small farmers, entrepreneurs, and tradesmen. In the Caribbean, credit is extensively used for housing.

Mr. Speaker, credit unions adhere to cooperative principles of self-help and democratic control. They deserve our encouragement and support, and H.R. 6863 would provide the funds through which our government can demonstrate concretely that we support them.

Finally, H.R. 6863 could help to send highly qualified cooperative volunteers to the region through the Volunteer Development Corps. In Costa Rica, volunteers are needed to advise the Union Regional de Cooperatives on processing and marketing potatoes and other vegetables; and to help consumer cooperatives create a central purchasing federation. In Jamaica, short-term volunteers can help the Ministry of Agriculture open the island's first cheese processing plant; work with the Pan American Development Foundation and Jamaica Cooperative Union in training fishermen to operate their own 76-foot mother ship and a 48-foot carrier ship; and to help Christiana Potato Growers Cooperative Association participate in an AID integrated rural development project involving marketing and storage of potatoes and other vegetables. VDC is highly cost effective in that the volunteer is not paid for his services. Thus, very modest dollars can expand this small but efficient program.

Most people do not realize that the C in CARE stands for cooperative. CARE's full name is Cooperative for American Relief Everywhere. CARE was created by the cooperative movement after World War II for relief to Europe. While it continues relief programs, CARE has over the years moved into development work. H.R. 6863 could help create five deep-sea fishing cooperatives in Belize; help a Costa Rican agricultural cooperative in soybean production and processing; provide for cooperative fish ponds in the Dominican Republic; and assist a Guatemalan cooperative in bean production. CARE is also encouraging cooperatives for crafts in Haiti; planting trees in Honduras; and assisting in a cooperative credit program for small landholders in Panama.

In short, Mr. Speaker, cooperatives can play a significant role in helping our neighbors to the south. As democratic business enterprises, they are the types of assistance programs all Americans can be proud of. Thus, I commend my colleagues for joining with me yesterday in supporting the funds contained in H.R. 6863 needed to implement the Caribbean Basin Initiative. I hope that the President will sign the bill into law and direct the State Department to make extensive use of the skills and talents of cooperatives in meeting the challenge to democracy that our neighbors to the south face.●

TRIBUTE TO ITALIAN TRIBUNE

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, over the past half century the Italian Tribune has established a long and rich tradition of service to New Jersey's Italian American community. I am proud to join with my colleagues in recognition of this respected Newark publication, which is the largest Italian American picture newspaper printed in English.

The Italian Tribune provides a lively source of news and culture for its readers. The spirit of the journal is perhaps best reflected in its publisher, my good friend Ace Alagna.

I have never considered the Tribune to be my paper, ownership and viability of the paper rests with the people for whom it was designed.

He states:

Ace Alagna has involved the paper directly with the Italian American community. He used the paper to marshall the energies of the Italian American community to provide emergency relief for the earthquake victims of Italy in 1976 and 1980.

The paper has grown in size and importance, and has laid strong foundations for making an impressive contribution to American readers over the next 50 years. This is a prospect that Italian Americans can view with satisfaction and pride, and I know my colleagues will join me in commending the Italian Tribune and its publisher, Ace Alagna, on this milestone occasion.●

CONSUMERS MUST HAVE A ROLE IN U.S. TRADE POLICIES

HON. FRANK ANNUNZIO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I draw to the attention of my colleagues and others, inside and outside the Government who are concerned with various aspects of international trade, two articles, "Consumers Group Seeking Larger Role in Trade Policy," and "Trade Policy 'Pros' Praise Doreen Brown," by Richard Lawrence, that appeared in the August 5 issue of the Journal of Commerce. At a time when domestic economic crises and discontent with our trading partners are fueling legislative reactions which threaten our open trading system, I urge consideration of the views and valuable services rendered by the Consumers for World Trade (CWT).

As chairman of the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, I read these two articles with particular interest. It is my understanding that the CWT is a national nonprofit membership organization established in 1978 and is the only consumer organization concerned exclusively with international trade policy. As stressed in the first article, "CWT fulfills a necessary mission no other U.S. consumer group has undertaken—the consistent promotion of consumer interests through U.S. trade policy."

Objectives of CWT include efforts to help insure that the American economy regain a healthy growth momentum, at stable prices, with high employment; that the competitiveness of American industry is maintained in both domestic and world markets; and that choices in the marketplace are provided for consumers of this country. In order to achieve these goals, CWT supports expanded world trade—both imports and exports—and believes in the importance of increasing productivity through the efficient utilization of human and capital resources.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the timeliness of these two articles and the significance of the work of the Consumers for World Trade for the American economy, I ask unanimous consent that these informative articles be printed in the RECORD.

CONSUMERS GROUP SEEKING LARGER ROLE IN TRADE POLICY

(By Richard Lawrence)

WASHINGTON.—The nation's only consumer group exclusively concerned with U.S. international trade policy is striving to make itself more of a force in the halls of government.

The four-year-old Consumers for World Trade, said its president, Doreen L. Brown, plans to develop closer ties with local consumer and other "public interest" groups around the country as one way to mobilize more active "grass-roots" support for a freer trade policy in Washington.

Many members of Congress, she said, may instinctively favor freer trade, but often they face strong protectionist pressures from industry.

"They want to hear from their constituents," she said in an interview, "and CWT, by working with 'back home' groups, can help generate the kind of pro-consumer mail and phone calls they want and need."

Early next year, for example, CWT and the Center for Public Representation in Madison, Wis., are due to launch an 18-month project to "involve consumer organizations in the trade policy debate," as CWT describes it.

The project will involve leaders of 30 to 50 local, state and national consumer organizations, who after briefings in Washington on international trade issues will prepare policy positions for their respective groups.

They would then state a convention here to "draw attention to the consumer's stake in world trade policy."

CWT was founded in 1978 by Mrs. Brown and others with the Consumer Education Council for World Trade to actively lobby for freer trade.

The council had represented an ad hoc coalition of 20 non-profit organizations seeking to defeat the Burke-Hartke bill, a controversial protectionist proposal of the early 1970s.

CWT, Mrs. Brown said, fulfills a necessary mission no other U.S. consumer group has undertaken—the consistent promotion of consumer interests through U.S. trade policy.

Other national groups such as the Consumer Federation of America and the National Consumers League only occasionally speak out on trade policy, and, Mrs. Brown contended, sometimes they take stands not in the consumers' interest.

As an example, she cited the federation and league's support of legislation to require a prescribed level of domestic content in any car sold in the United States.

The legislation, she said, is "the most protectionist and anti-consumer" bill being considered in this session of Congress; it is likely to boost imported car prices by at least $3,000 a car.

CWT, in the midst of a membership drive (it welcomes individuals, corporations and other organizations, but only individuals have a direct voice in CWT policy), lobbies the administration and Congress not only against protectionist import restrictions but also for programs that help expand U.S. exports.

Two pending bills the group supports are the Export Trading Company Act and amendments to clarify the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. "Exports create jobs and increase our foreign exchange earnings; they make protectionism less likely," Mrs. Brown said.

Still, she makes it plain that CWT will not back any kind of export promotion measure. For instance, she said, CWT opposes a bigger budget for the Export-Import Bank because of the bank's government-subsidized financing.

In principle, Mrs. Brown said, CWT opposes trade subsidies, either by the United States or foreign governments.

In the four years of CWT's life, the group, like almost any organization, has "won some and lost some," she acknowledges. The "wins" Mrs. Brown counts include the administration's lifting of import restrictions on footwear and TV sets and an administration decision against import quotas on casein. She counts as a "modified success" the Senate Finance Committee's "watering down" of the pending trade reciprocity bill.

Among CWT's "losses" are the administration's fixing import quotas on sugar, its negotiation of another restrictive international textile and apparel agreement, and its "acquiescence" to Japanese car export curbs.

Despite its "freer trade" rhetoric, Mrs. Brown reported she has been at times "disappointed" with the Reagan administration. The way it first espoused free trade, "we thought we might go out of business," for lack of issues, she said.

But the administration's restrictive actions on textiles, sugar and autos have changed her thinking sharply. She also believes that the administration makes excessive use of "foreign policy" controls on exports. Those controls, she explained, amount to international trade barriers.

CWT's current top priorities are to defeat the domestic content auto bill, help move President Reagan's Caribbean Basin Initiative through Congress without protectionist amendments, enact liberalizing changes to the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, and help make sure Congress approves a meaningful export trading company bill.

CWT continues to withhold support from trade reciprocity legislation, even the Senate Finance Committee's new version of it, which the administration and a number of business groups endorse. The bill, argued Mrs. Brown, still places too much "emphasis on unilateral decisions and retaliatory measures."

TRADE POLICY "PROS" PRAISE DOREEN BROWN

Doreen L. Brown, the Consumers for World Trade president, gets high marks for her work from trade policy "pros" both in and out of government.

"She and her organization," said one government official, "are one of the few we can rely on in the fight for freer trade." He lauded the Consumers for World Trade bimonthly newsletter as "one of the best ways in town for keeping abreast of U.S. foreign trade policy."

A major business group representative called CWT a "very helpful" advocate on international trade policy. CWT gives a larger dimension to business pleadings for a more open trade policy in Washington, he said. Mrs. Brown, in his view, is both an "unusually quick study" and "very articulate."

French-born, Mrs. Brown came to Washington just before World War II. In a sense, she has been in foreign trade since childhood. Her father was an executive with a Baltimore-based export-import company. Besides English, she speaks fluent French, Italian and Spanish.

After graduating from Bryn Mawr College in 1947, she went almost at once into international work with the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization. She then married and raised two children, now in their 20s.

Mr. Brown became active in international trade policy in the early 1970s as chairwoman of the Consumer Education Council on World Trade.

She serves on two government trade panels: the U.S. Trade Representative's international steel policy advisory committee and the Commerce Department's importers and retailers textile advisory committee, where she is trying to persuade the department to reform the way it goes about limiting textile and apparel imports.

Mrs. Brown's goal is to broaden CWT's membership beyond "sophisticated" consumers to the kind of large "grass-roots" organization labor unions boast. The more CWT members, the more clout consumers will have in Washington, she reasons.

CWT members not only get a voice on Capitol Hill and into the administration but also a bimonthly newsletter, access to a speakers bureau, and the possibility of trade seminars and conferences. CWT's 12-member board includes a number of high government officials, some of who have turned to academia or private business. They take turns speaking out for consumers in CWT testimony in Congress.●

EXPRESSION OF GRATITUDE TO ENVOY PHILIP HABIB

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, as the Congress prepares to recess, I want to express my gratitude for the courageous efforts of Special Envoy Philip C. Habib to bring about an end to the tragic bloodshed in Lebanon.

On many occasions, he has been called upon to serve his country in resolving the most difficult and challenging problems in this particularly volatile region. His prowess in diplomacy and his negotiating skills are legend among his colleagues and foreign government officials. His successes are noteworthy.

Once again, in furtherance of the national interests of his country, he has carried out with dedication the extremely complex negotiations to end this horrible bloodshed and destruction in Beirut.

In the midst of the bitter fighting, Envoy Habib traveled to war-torn Beirut and deftly worked with the many concerned parties to effect a rapid cease-fire. He displayed not only personal courage, but incredible stamina in pursuing the long-term negotiating efforts. When a resolution of the problems appeared to be slipping away, his determination and professionalism prevailed; he resolved differences by urging compromise when necessary, and displayed sensitivity to the vital interests of the concerned factions. He brought together men with varying backgrounds and political positions, and urged them to stop the carnage. When personal meetings with high-ranking officials were critical to maintain momentum, he seized the moment and shuttled off to distant capitals in his quest for peace.

He is more than a man with a mission; I believe that because of his personal commitment and involvement with the Middle East, he has truly devoted his life to resolving the longstanding troubles in this strategic area of the world. It is perhaps fitting that a son of Lebanon should return to bring peace to his ancestral land.

As we approach the day for the implementation of the Habib plan to bring about an end to the siege of West Beirut and the removal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, I encourage my colleagues to join me in expressing our sincere appreciation for Mr. Habib's distinguished service and historic accomplishments in working to bring peace to the Middle East.●

AMEND SECTION 513 OF TAX CODE

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, today, my distinguished colleague from the State of Tennessee, Mr. DUNCAN, is introducing a bill to exempt from taxation income earned by tax-exempt organizations through exchanging, renting, or selling the names and addresses from donor or membership lists. I am pleased to cosponsor this legislation.

Under current law, income earned by an exempt organization from a trade or business which is regularly carried on and is not substantially related to the activities constituting the basis for the organization's tax exemption, is considered to be unrelated business income subject to taxation. This provision, first enacted in 1950, was designed to prevent exempt groups from having an unfair competitive edge over taxable businesses engaged in similar activities.

Recently, the Court of Claims and the Internal Revenue Service have taken the position that income earned by groups from the rental or exchange of donor lists constitutes unrelated business income subject to taxation. While these rulings are a highly questionable interpretation of present law, legislation is the appropriate solution. Our bill addresses those rulings, and adds to section 513 of the Internal Revenue Code a specific exemption from taxation for income earned through the exchange, sale, or rental of names and addresses from donor or membership lists.

Tax-exempt organizations provide a wide range of services and programs for needy individuals. Many of these services and programs assist particular groups of people who otherwise would go unaided. For example, through its national service program the Disabled American Veterans offers free assistance to veterans in penetrating the bureaucratic maze and obtaining the benefits to which they are entitled.

Funds for the services and programs provided by tax-exempt groups come primarily from tax-deductible contributions. Contributions are solicited generally by direct mail from individuals whose names are maintained on donor or member lists. To keep the lists current, names of individuals who have died, moved or no longer contribute are removed. The name attrition rate can be high. In the case of the Disabled American Veterans, for example, the attrition rate runs about 12 percent per year.

To maintain donor lists large enough to provide organizations with the contributions required to sustain their programs, these names must be replaced. Replacement is best accomplished through the rental, sale, or exchange of names from an organization's donor list to and with other organizations. Not only does the acquisition of new names through these means help maintain a list large enough to sustain an organization's program in these difficult economic times, but also income from the rental, sale, or exchange of lists helps defray the high costs of acquisition of names and maintenance of a donor list.

Since its enactment in 1950, section 513 of the Code has been amended frequently to provide exceptions to the taxation of unrelated business income. Public entertainment activities at agricultural fairs, certain convention and trade show activities, billing and data processing services rendered for hospitals by hospital service organizations, bingo games, and certain telephone and electric pole rentals have been exempted. In enacting these exemptions, Congress found that the benefit to the exempt entity through relief from unrelated business tax outweighed any detriment to competing commercial enterprises. Such is the case here. Exempt organizations that rent, sell, or exchange their own mailing lists do not directly compete with commercial mailing organizations. Each donor or membership list is unique. Exempt groups do not act as a clearinghouse for other interested parties and do not engage in direct mail activities for groups other than themselves. Thus, they do not compete with commercial groups that offer a full range of direct mail services.

We are now calling on the private sector to provide more than ever before to meet our national needs ranging from education and the arts to health and the preservation of rights. The proposed amendment to section 513 will materially assist exempt organizations in their efforts to solicit needed funds from the public and at minimal loss of revenue. I hope that the Congress will act on this legislation quickly and favorably.●

HIGHER EDUCATION INVESTMENT PLAN

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, time and time again, I hear my constitutents ask about education funds. The cost of tution at a decent college these days for 1 year is more than I paid for my house 12 years ago. Just as owning a home is an integral part of the American dream, an even more important part is the belief that every citizen has the fundamental right to learn, to make a better life for him or her self. I see that dream fading with the rising cost of higher education.

There are more than 12 million Americans from all income brackets, all ages, and all walks of life who today are students at our colleges and universities. Those numbers must not be diminished because of lack of funds.

Every democratic society needs a literate population. Our greatest threat is ignorance. Our greatest defense is a population that can read and make decisions for themselves. Our greatest defense is a people that can go beyond their own personal experience for information. Colleges and universities give people those skills. It is the responsiblity of this Government to make sure that the funds will be there to teach those skills.

For these reasons, today I have introduced a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the establishment of, and the deduction of contributions to, education savings accounts.

This bill is the result of a study done by the Citizens League of Baltimore to determine additional ways to help students and their families pay for higher education. The Citizens League has recommended a higher education investment plan that is practical, administratively simple, and economically sound. Today, I am pleased to introduce this companion legislation to a Senate bill introduced by Senator MATHIAS on June 30 of this year.

Essentially, this legislation would amend the IRS Code to permit individuals to set aside for educational purposes up to $2,000 per year per student beneficiary and be allowed a corresponding income tax deduction. The funds would not be taxed until after the student has graduated and then the funds would be taxed as income to the beneficiary over a 10-year period in 10 equal parts. The legislation also sets aside 5 percent of the money placed in these accounts for a State scholarship fund.

Such legislation could only be beneficial to all our attempts to make this country one where education is a right, not a gift to the wealthy. Education is the greatest gift we can give our children, and our country.●

MILITARY AID TO HONDURAS

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the newly elected civilian government of Honduran President Roberto Suazo Cordova, and I support a generous U.S. development assistance program to that impoverished nation. However, I am extremely disturbed by the tremendous escalation of military aid to that country, and by the emerging U.S. policy of using Honduras as a pawn in our conflicts with other nations in the region. I believe the United States should be doing all it can to help isolate Honduras from the violence in the Central American isthmus; instead we appear to be doing all we can to throw it further into the fray. A recent editorial from the Boston Globe analyzed this trend, and pointed out the dangers inherent in such a policy. I would like to include this in the RECORD now for the benefit of my colleagues.

[From the Boston Globe, Aug. 12, 1982]

HONDURAS ON THE BRINK

For months, friends of Honduras have feared that its weak civilian government would be undermined by the US policy of "using" Honduras as a staging area and an agent in the widening Central American war.

Those fears are now coming true. A number of recent signs suggest that the Reagan Administration's insistence on a military victory in El Salvador, and on a continued war of nerves with Nicaragua, is beginning to spill the violence over into Honduras. There is a trend toward bombings, bank robberies and other guerrilla operations that are clearly acts of retribution.

Honduras could and ought to be an innocent bystander. It is the third poorest country in the western hemisphere and has a small, wealthy oligarchy typical of the region. Class differences are more muted than in Salvador or Guatemala, however. The Honduran upper classes have not shared the vicious repressive instincts that provoked revolution elsewhere.

During the 1960s, under a moderate military dictatorship, Honduras embraced the goals of John Kennedy's Alliance for Progress and initiated significant land and labor reform. Allowed to stand aside from the troubles outside its borders—and provided sufficient economic assistance—Honduras could avoid the cycle of bloodshed and pull itself up.

It appears that Honduras will not have that opportunity. Although a civilian government took over last year, the power of the Honduran military is growing. US military aid is being poured in, along with numerous overt and covert US military advisers and CIA personnel, and even some Argentine troops brought in to disguise the American presence. As always happens when civilian governments are not well established, this aid gives the military a disproprotionate influence.

Honduras faces no threat that would justify all the aid. It is simply a payoff for doing the Administration's dirty work. For months, Honduran forces have allowed exiled National Guardsmen of the former Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza, and some counterrevolutionary factions of Miskito Indians, to launch counterrevolutionary raids cross the Nicaraguan border.

Now, tense relations with Nicaragua are reportedly building toward war hysteria. Honduras could have eased those tensions months ago by accepting a Nicaraguan offer of joint border patrols, but, probably on a signal from Washington, it has turned a deaf ear. Meanwhile, to the west, Honduran forces have been cooperating with Salvadoran troops in a series of secret hammer-and-anvil operations to trap Salvadoran guerrillas along the border.

The cost of being a spear carrier for the Reagan Administration was breathtakingly evident in the earnest words of a Honduran officer in a recent radio interview: "The US will supply all the arms, equipment and body bags that we need, and all we have to do is supply the bodies."●

FINANCIAL IRREGULARITIES IN ELECTIONS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I brought to the attention of my colleagues, an article from the Washington Post dealing with financing of local elections in the District of Columbia and possible violations of the Hatch Act. I would like to submit that article for the RECORD, along with additional information relating to this matter.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 18, 1982]

HATCH PROBE—D.C. EMPLOYES' VIOLATIONS ALLEGED

(By Juan Williams)

The federal Merit Systems Protection Board is investigating possible violations of the Hatch Act by D.C. government employes who are alleged to have done work for Mayor Marion Barry's reelection campaign, officials of the board said yesterday.

James Sugiyama, associate special counsel for investigations of the board's Office of Special Counsel, confirmed that an investigation is taking place and that the Hatch Act violations are alleged to have been committed by members of the American Federation of Government Employes (AFGE), which has endorsed Barry's reelection bid.

The Hatch Act prohibits federal and D.C. government workers from active participation in partisan political campaigns. The board has legal authority to impose penalties, including firing and suspending employes, for Hatch Act violations.

"There were some union activities involving District employes and the campaign that have been brought to our attention, and we are trying to find out the process at this point to determine exactly what happened," said Sugiyama. He declined to further detail the allegations. Sugiyama declined to say how many persons were under investigation or when the investigation will be completed. He said the investigation had been launched after the board received several complaints, but would not disclose the source of the complaints. "I don't want to leave any implication that we are after Barry or the AFGE," said Sugiyama.

Ivanhoe Donaldson, Barry's campaign manager, questioned whether the federal merit board has the right to investigate possible Hatch Act violations by District of Columbia workers.

"That's garbage," said Donaldson. "They don't have jurisdiction. A local agency would have to handle that, probably the [D.C. government's] Office of Employee Appeals." Sugiyama said that the merit board is the body with jurisdiction in this instance.

A spokeswoman for AFGE said Kenneth Blaylock, head of the union, is in New York for a convention and declined immediate comment in his absence.

In addition to its inquiry into possible Hatch Act violations, according to a knowledgeable merit board source, the board also is collecting information on whether AFGE might be in violation of the District of Columbia's campaign finance laws by paying the salary of political organizer Jane Danowitz.

Danowitz is in charge of a union-sponsored phone bank operation and efforts to gain union support for Barry. Her operation is in a suite of offices on the same floor of the same building as Barry's reelection headquarters. Her union job description, obtained from a source, states that she works "under instructions of the manager of the campaign" to reelect Barry.

Danowitz said yesterday that she reports directly to the director of the union's Legislative and Political Affairs Department, but acknowledged that the union political director may consult with Donaldson in setting out Danowitz's tasks.

Under D.C. law, AFGE can give only $2,000 to Barry's campaign. The union has given $500 thus far. If Danowitz's work—for which, she said she is being paid at a yearly rate of $25,000 for a period of 90 days, or a total of more than $6,000—were judged to be a political contribution, AFGE could be determined to have contributed more than the maximum amount.

While the merit board is looking into this situation, the final determination would rest with the D.C. Office of Campaign Finance, which has not launched any probe of the Barry campaign.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Memorandum: 6d.

To: Jane P. McMichael, director, Legislative and Political Affairs.

From: Donald M. Haines, Legislative Attorney.

Subject: Election law restrictions and prohibitions for D.C. elections.

In view of AFGE's increased involvement in District of Columbia elections, I thought it would be helpful to review some of the pertinent provisions of the D.C. election law. Although D.C. law parallels the Federal Election Campaign Act in many ways, it also includes some notable differences. (The law is found in chapter 14 of title 1 of the District of Columbia Code.) This discussion will focus on three aspects of the law: sources of funding and election support, limitations on contributions, and recordkeeping and reporting requirements.

SOURCES OF FUNDING AND ELECTION SUPPORT

Unlike the Federal Election Campaign Act, D.C. law contains no prohibition on the use of general treasury funds to make political contributions to candidates for District office. In fact, the law's definition of contribution expressly includes "any assessment, fee, or membership dues." [1] Therefore, any contribution made by AFGE-PAC to candidates for District office (mayor, city council, school board, but not including the Delegate to Congress, which is a Federal office covered by the Federal Election Campaign Act) should not be made from scarce AFGE-PAC voluntary contributions but from the administrative account using general treasury money.

Using treasury money may have certain tax consequences for AFGE, however, and we should be careful to follow the advice from National COPE on how to minimize or eliminate those consequences. The COPE Handbook provides:

"By having an AFGE-PAC administrative account, we are fortunate in having already established a "separate segregated fund" for treasury monies to be used in political expenditures. We should take care, however, that whatever funds go into this account do not come from interest-bearing accounts."

Thus, if transfers are going to be made from National AFGE's general treasury finds, to the AFGE-PAC account, then AFGE should use a non-interest bearing holding account to receive funds with the funds then being split, part of the AFGE-PAC administrative account and the bulk to AFGE's general account. Both the AFGE-PAC administrative account and the AFGE general treasury account may be interest bearing. (COPE recommends that per capita payments be made from the holding account, not the general treasury account.)

In addition, we should make sure that all "political expenditures", is IRS terms, using treasury money are made from the AFGE-PAC administrative account. This is important to avoid tax liability (and possible other consequences) for AFGE's general treasury funds. IRS includes in its definition of political expenditure, opposition or support to an appointment or nomination, so expenses relating to Senate Confirmation, for example, should be paid out of the AFGE-PAC administrative account. The reason for these actions is to avoid tax liability since taxes are owed only if there are both investment income and a political expenditure from the same fund.

It may also be advisable to establish a separate AFGE-PAC administrative account to handle general treasury funds which are to be used in D.C. or state elections allowing treasury funds to be spent for political purposes. If we pursue this course, our reporting situations change.

In addition, District law parallels the Federal Election Campaign Act in exempting certain activities from the definition of contribution and thereby allowing AFGE to make certain expenditures which would not be counted toward the limit on how much AFGE may legally contribute to a particular candidate.

The cost of direct communications to AFGE members and their families, on any subject including outright endorsement of particular candidates, is not included within the definition of contributions.

The District Office of Campaign Finance interprets this exclusion to require that the communications not be done in conjunction with or after consultation with a candidate or his campaign. If such consultation is involved, then the cost is a contribution.

Subject to other requirements such as the Hatch Act (which is discussed in a separate memorandum), individuals may provide personal services on a voluntary basis so long as they are not compensated for those services or their time.

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS

District law limits the total amount of contributions to a particular candidate. The limits are determined by the office which the candidate seeks. The limits are:

Mayor	$2,000
Council chairman	1,500
At-large council member	1,000
Ward council member or at-large school board member	400
Ward school board member	200
Advisory neighborhood commission member	25

Unlike the Federal law, this limitation is on all contributions "including both the primary and general or special election" and applies to all contributions aggregated together.[5]

AFGE-PAC may make an independent expenditure advocating the election or defeat of a candidate for office. So long as that expenditure is not made at the request or suggestion of the candidate or his agents, the expenditure is not included in the contribution effort. If, however, the expenditure is made in coordination or consultation with the candidate or his agents, then according to the Office of Campaign Finance, the expenditure would be subject to the limitation.[6]

District law requires that the limitation apply to "all contributions made . . . directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate."

District law also prohibits the making or receiving cash contributions of $50 or more.

Applying these restrictions to our apparent activities, AFGE has already made in-kind contributions to Mayor Barry's campaign in at least two situations and possibly in a third. The amounts involved in these situations should be deducted from the $2,000 limit before any monetary contribution is made, and that contribution—together with the in-kind contributions should not exceed $2,000.

Obviously, AFGE is free to communicate with its members about the campaign. The difficulty arises in doing this in coordination or consultation with campaign personnel. Bernard's working relationship with the Barry campaign, including advising them on how to address certain issues in public forums, does not fall within the "member communication" category and AFGE's payment of his salary and benefits for the time spent on campaign work is a contribution subject to the $2,000 limit. The same is true for any other staff member. Although discussion with other AFL-CIO unions about promoting the Barry campaign conceivably falls within the definition of contribution, I would argue that contacts with other AFL-CIO affiliates falls within internal membership communications of the AFL-CIO and so, at least initially, the cost associated with such discussions should not be included as part of AFGE's contribution.

When selling tickets to AFGE staff for the Barry breakfast, Mildred was clearly not instructed to limit herself to AFGE members. Thus, Mildred's salary and benefits for the time spent on the Barry breakfast or other campaign activity must also be included in the $2,000 limit on contributions. The same is true for the costs of the breakfast itself (because it was not limited to AFGE members), although AFGE may be able to deduct the income from ticket sales from the cost in order to determine the net contribution value of the event.

The third situation which involves a possible contribution is the press conference endorsing Barry. That conference was "for the benefit of" the Mayor's campaign, so it would seem to fall within the definition of contribution. On the other hand, the conference was a press event which may not be a contribution if AFGE did not work out arrangements (such as timing and things to say) with the Mayor's campaign.

The 90-day temporary political organizer position also constitutes a contribution to the Mayor's campaign. The position description notes that the organizer will be working "under the direct instructions of the manager of the campaign." In this situation, the organizer would be a contribution even if his activities were limited to contacting only AFGE members and their families because there is express consultation and coordination with the Mayor's campaign.●

PUBLIC HOUSING TENANT PROTECTION BILL

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, the situation in the Nation's public housing has never been graver. Low-income tenants are being asked to contribute a higher and higher portion of their income as rent in public housing projects. At the same time, rumors are rampant that the Reagan administration is planning to sell these projects around the country. The administration has indeed already taken actions to dispose of low-income housing built under the 236 program.

This is happening at a time when life has never been harder for low-income citizens. Reaganomics has crippled the economy, making it virtually impossible for those without specialized skills to find a job. Health benefits are being restricted, food stamps are being cut back, unemployment training programs have been slashed, and education money is being cut. Reaganomics has cut the ability of those with low incomes to survive and to provide for themselves and their families.

To counter at least one aspect of this, I am introducing the Rangel Public Housing Tenant Protection Act. This legislation would rollback the tenant contribution from 30 to 25 percent of adjusted income and establish numerous exclusions to be taken before that 25 percent is calculated, but it would also prohibit the demolition, sale, or other disposal of public housing and section 236 projects except under the most stringent of conditions.

Among the exclusions provided for in the bill are—the value of food stamps; all medical and dental expenses (including prescription drugs); income from any member of the family earned while in school; income from any member of the family earned during during the course of a summer job, if that person is 18 or below; $500 for each minor, disabled or handicapped person, student, elderly person; all child care expenses related to working; all educational expenses including book, school supplies, tuition, and room and board at any accredited school, college, trade school, or university.

In addition to provisions which deal with tenant rent contribution, the Rangel bill would prohibit the demolition of public housing projects and section 236 projects except when the following stringent provisions are met: The project is substantially unoccupied; there is no waiting list for public housing units for the area in which the project is located; the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Public Housing Authority involved, and the local government approve of the disposal; the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Public Housing Authority have entered into agreements with any displaced tenants guaranteeing them actual, reasonable expenses for moving himself and his family, actual reasonable expenses incurred in searching for a new home (including the cost of wages foregone in order to search for new home), and a lump payment of $200 per person to help allay the psychological and emotional disruptions caused by the displacement.●

CONGRATULATIONS SUNDAY GLOBE

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an ambitious endeavor which has just been launched by the Globe-Times, a daily newspaper which serves the people of the 15th District. In Bethlehem, nearly everybody reads the Globe; for decades, 6 days a week, the Globe-Times has reached into many households in Bethlehem, touching people's lives at every level—be it work or recreation, local or international news, sports, arts, or social activities.

As is pointed out in a Globe editorial of August 15, 1982, however, the 6-day-a-week newspaper has become inadequate to report on the times. Hence, as of that date, the Globe-Times has launched a Sunday newspaper—the Sunday Globe.

The editorial traces the growth of the Globe-Times; its origins in the Daily Times, which premiered on February 4, 1867; its merger with the Daily Globe on October 19, 1925; its philosophy of publishing the news without fear or favor; and its impact on the community. The Globe-Times has fearlessly covered the happenings and the people in its hometown, and—in a sense—has helped to make it a real community.

I commend the Globe-Times staff and management for its faith in the Lehigh Valley, for making it a better place in which to live and grow, and for creating the Sunday Globe. I am confident that the Sunday Globe will continue to honor the fine Globe-Times tradition of "maintaining the people's right to know."

The editorial follows:

[From the Sunday Globe, Aug. 15, 1982]

A HISTORIC MORNING

The first Sunday newspaper in Bethlehem's 240-year history is launched by The Globe-Times with this issue.

While the founding Moravian brethren who huddled in that log cabin on the banks of the Monocacy Creek probably never conceived a 100-page edition with photographs in full color serving their settlement. I believe they could have readily understood the purpose.

Bethlehem, their communal camp, is today a mature community, the heart of a budding metropolitan area. Maturity brought an explosion of interests—and a complexity of problems. Just as the colonial presses of John Bradmueller long ago become inadequate to report on the times, so has the six-day-a-week newspaper.

The Sunday Globe is a logical extension of a tradition of service. We first pledged to serve and protect the interests of our hometown more than a century ago. An editorial in our parent paper stated in that founding issue on Feb. 4, 1867: "The Daily Times will be neutral in politics and will strive to be a welcome daily visitor . . . We have nothing to complain of in the past, and hope for as good, and will strive to merit still better support in the future."

The Times survived challenges from a number of competing publications and become the voice of North Bethlehem. With a foot on two bridges, it reported this community's first historic transition—the borough breaking away from the church-controlled mold where for a century the Moravian heirarchy was also the political law.

While developments in the Moravian Church continued to be big news, the paper started reporting such activities as meetings of the Friends of Ireland, which clearly recognized interests of immigrants. It also disclosed the presence of "illicit whiskey establishments," which was news to everyone.

Our second parent arrived in September, 1894, with the founding of the Daily Globe of South Bethlehem. It, too, was born of mission. Streams of people from foreign countries came to feed belching furnaces of the developing steel industry. No single religion or even a common language unified them. This fed suspicion and distrust. Is there any wonder the new voice of South Bethlehem started serving readers with this front page disclaimer: "The Daily Globe is not the Organ of any Party."

The borough papers were couriers and advocates in the consolidation of Bethlehem as a city in 1917. While the coming of World War I and growth of Bethlehem Steel helped consummate the consolidation, the completion of the Hill-to-Hill bridge in 1924 made it a reality.

However, factionalism plagued the city, and there was little hope of ending it as long as each side had its own newspaper. On Oct. 19, 1925, the Daily Times of Bethlehem and the Daily Globe of South Bethlehem merged into the Bethlehem Globe-Times. Our files hold no intimate insights on how that was achieved. We suspect civic leaders took turns twisting arms until they persuaded the two rival newspaper factions to get together for the good of the community.

The merger did not go smoothly, and the Great Depression of the 1930s periled the paper's existence. Rolland L. Adams, a young bank examiner hired by the E. P. Wilbut Trust, was brought in to run the business affairs. He saved the paper from financial distress, built it into one of the state's most viable and respected dailies, and prepared an orderly transition to members of his family, who are building on that legacy with the debut of The Sunday Globe today.

And why a Sunday? For more than a half a century, The Globe-Times has been a six-day courier of news for Bethlehem, Hellertown, Fountain Hill and the townships and boroughs around us. With the folding of the Evening Chronicle in Allentown two years ago, we filled the afternoon void there by opening a Lehigh County news office at 933 Turner St., now computer linked and staffed by a half dozen reporters and photographers.

It was time for a Sunday paper. Our neighbors in Easton, Stroudsburg, and Bucks County all recently started Sunday editions. When marketing surveys showed that the Bethlehem area readers, now served principally by Allentown, would support their own Sunday paper, Globe-Times President Donald S. Taylor made the recommendation and the board gave him the green light.

Thus, at a time when newspapers in the metropolitan areas are dying, when even healthy papers in the regions feel increased competition from electronic media, and when ominous forecasts abound about the printed word, we're investing. We have added nine newsroom staff members (from a pool of more than 100 applicants), other departments have expanded similarly, and much additional computer equipment, including a substantial portion from the defunct Philadelphia Bulletin, has been purchased.

We are looking beyond the present economic gloom. We're confident in the future of this area. And we're confident that the Sunday Globe has a mission for today's readers as important as any in our 115-year-history.

We will look fatter, more colorful, and filled with new features, but our philosophy will continue to be the statement of policy first issued to the staff 40 years ago:

"Our joint objective is to publish all the news without fear or favor; to evaluate it as honestly and objectively as is humanly possible to do so; to respect the rights of all groups and individuals; to support city, school, county, state and national governments when they operate in the public's interests, and forthrightly to criticize them when, in our studied opinion, they subvert the public welfare."

And we feel the same way the first editor did when he wrote in first Daily Times in 1867: "We have nothing to complain of in the past, and hope for as good, and will strive to merit still greater support in the future."●

A TIME FOR REAL REFORM

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of talk around this Congress about taxes. And the tax bill that will be considered this week is referred to by our President as "tax reform."

A study released this week by Tax Analysts, a non-profit research organization, reveals a real need in this country to get some profit-making companies to start paying taxes. This is so basic, I am not sure it can even be called reform.

We all like to talk about how this Government takes pride in enacting and administering laws in an equal and fair manner. I would like to share with you some interesting statistics in this regard. According to the study, Anheuser-Busch earned $310.5 million on U.S. sales in 1981. Yet, it did not pay one cent in Federal corporate income taxes to our Government.

Now in 1981, Anheuser-Busch produced 54.5 million barrels of beer, leading all beer producers in the country with 30.3 percent of the market. I happen to have a beer producer in my district, G. Heileman Brewing Co., of La Crosse, Wis. In 1981, they produced 14 million barrels, considerably less than the leader, constituting only 7.8 percent of the total market. Yet, they did their part as American corporate citizens, paying some $13.6 million in Federal corporate income taxes.

Perhaps you have also heard that many times during the past year Heilemans sought Justice Department approval to merge with other beer companies in an attempt to compete with Anheuser-Busch on a fair and competitive manner. Every time they have been turned down.

Seems to me there is a need for more reform in our Government.●

CZECHOSLOVAKIA'S OBLIGATION

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that the Government of Czechoslovakia is not meeting its obligations. Under a 1968 agreement, the United States and Czechoslovakia agreed to make reciprocal payments of social security benefits to residents of the two countries. This means that both the United States and Czechoslovakia are supposed to pay benefits to individuals who are entitled, regardless of where they live.

However, during the last year, it has come to my attention that there are significant problems with this arrangement. There are a number of American citizens who are not receiving the benefits to which they are entitled from Czechoslovakia. In an effort to address this situation, when Congress reviewed the proposed settlement of claims between the United States and Czechoslovakia under the Czechoslovakian Claims Settlement Act of 1981, I proposed an amendment to require the Secretary of State to conduct a detailed assessment. In particular, the law mandated a review to assess the extent to which Czechoslovakia is complying with the spirit and provisions of the agreement, a comparison of benefits realized by residents of Czechoslovakia and the United States, and an evaluation of the basis of the differences in such benefits. In addition, the law required an assessment of the feasibility, likely effects and advisability of terminating the U.S. payments in response to inequities and incomparabilities of benefits payments.

The Secretary of State has recently submitted the report, and I believe that my colleagues will find the results of interest. In brief, the report concludes the following:

First, at present the United States pays about $480,000 per month to about 1,500 social security beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia, of whom about 400 are U.S. citizens. Czechoslovakia pays about $32,000 per month to about 200 U.S. citizen beneficiaries in the United States.

Second, Czechoslovakia probably pays few, if any, social security benefits to non-U.S. citizen residents of the United States.
